STORE: Decision could go to planning commission and a host of other allowed uses. Dollar General qualifies as an allowed use.

According to Community Development Director Patrick Davenport, City zoning regulations are spelled out in the City's Development Code, and proposed projects must meet City requirements for lighting, maneuverability, parking, landscaping, signage, lot coverage, and other considerations. The City planners are charged with reviewing site-plan applications to see they meet City requirements but they are, by law, not allowed to decide if a proposed business is needed, wanted, or likely to be successful. They must make their decisions based on the established criteria.

The decision regarding Dollar General is a Type II decision, which means it could be called up to the Planning Commission for review.

Davenport said they should soon receive a Master Plan application for development of the remainder of the property to the east, behind BiMart, fronting on West Hood Avenue, which will include several more commercial pads and some apartments. That property adjoins the 13 acres along Highway 242 that is currently listed for sale. The 13 acres are zoned multi-family, which means it could be developed to include single-family homes, townhouses, and apartments.

Sisters Folk Festival seeks volunteers

The Sisters Folk Festival (SFF) is quickly approaching, and excitement is building as festival preparation is in full swing. SFF is in search of folks who can commit to 10 hours of volunteering throughout the festival weekend (September 6-8). In return, volunteers are given a wristband to enjoy the music at all 11 venues.

Many of the festival volunteer jobs are near or inside a venue, so catching your new favorite musician or band can be easy to do. The festival is seeking evening volunteers at several venues to monitor the door, run bike valet, tend bar and sell merchandise. There are even a few set-up and take-down volunteer spots available for those more inclined toward heavy lifting. SFF volunteers are given a volunteer T-shirt, festival wristband, and are invited to attend the post-festival volunteer appreciation party.

To join the volunteer team, visit www.sistersfolkfestival.org/volunteer and submit a volunteer application. Kate Donovan, event manager, will contact you with next steps.
