Eugene Night.
Cricket song in grass fields
while half moon
slips west.

Under apple tree
I play my flute

Alone like Hermit thrush
making songs
from darkness.

POET'S CORNER

Still Alive

by A. Porter

I like the bull frogs chug-a-rumming in Amazon Ditch Down in the cattails where the mowing machine can't reach,
And the crickets
singing to the moon
like they've always done.

And out west I like the fields — waste land they're called—full of lupine and buttercups Spreading glorious between flat buildings
and fenced piles of rusting junk.

I wish well to these,
And to indians,
fleeing their destruction
through parched night jungles, and to us,
who like passengers on the Titanic sit at sumptuous tables drunk on the wine of high ideas scarcely aware of the narrow passage that fast approaches.
