"Eugene's Favorite Burger and Breakfast Stop"

Life has been getting busier for Ariel Klein and Gregory Field. Their restaurant, Hamburger Terry's, recently swept the omelette and hamburger categories of a city-wide taste contest. "The day after," recalls Ariel, "the restaurant was just swamped. And it hasn't let up."

The lines now form earlier and last longer at this intimate hide-away in the Fifth Street Public Market. Its popularity is an extension of the obvious pride the owners take in their product.

"I just love our food," says Gregory. "I could never eat at Wendy's. It's been etched deeply in my brain what a good burger is." Muffins, including the uncommon strawberry bran, are baked fresh every morning. The burgers, "5 ounces of indecently delicious, extra lean," are hand-shaped from beef ground fresh twice weekly.

The menu covers several pages. Eight varieties of stuffed potatoes have been recently added to the seven breakfast specials (from "Just a Nibble" to "I Can't Believe I Ate the Whole Thing"); 24 different omelettes, including a surprise from the chef's imagination; and 24 uniquely named burgers. Cold Sandwiches, salads, soups, juices and Italian sodas complete the fare. Prices range in the one to five dollar ballpark.

The two owners have run the show for three years, since the original Terry, who also started the Greek Isle Cafe upstairs, left to be a counselor in Hawaii. Buying the business was "sort of a whim," says Ariel. "We thought we'd check it out." "A fluke," agrees Gregory. "But the more we looked, the more feasible it seemed."

They inherited a manger, learned the ropes by the handle of their frying pan, and it's been uphill since. Now they're ready for the next move.

"Starting July 1," says Ariel, "we'll be open till nine six nights a week. We're also getting a beer and wine license. And in mid-July, we're remodeling with new tables and floors."

Life, in this compact corner of culinary creations, should keep getting busier.
