

Ward, 1225 Sixth avenue west, who came in 1853; C. B. Bagley, who came in 1852; L. M. Lyon, who came in 1858; N. Jones, 414 Fourth avenue; Walter Graham, 502 Fifth avenue; John McArthur, 411 Fourth avenue; R. C. Crawford, who crossed the plains to Oregon territory in 1847; S. D. Crockett, 359 Olympia place, who came in 1852; J. M. Loyns, 168 Boren avenue; Mrs. E. M. Reynolds, granddaughter of M. M. Bell, and Mrs. Charlotte E. Patten, daughter of William N. Bell.

Tyee Webster opened the ceremony, briefly introducing C. B. Bagley, who spoke for the committee which was appointed five years ago to secure the statue for the city. On behalf of Messrs. Zbinder, Crichton, and himself, Mr. Bagley explained the history of the monument, the selection of the design of a local sculptor, James Wehn, and the naming of the triangle where it stands as Tilikum place, in honor of the Indian Chief and his tribe, who were the tilikums of the early white men. He told also of the modern organization of Seattleites whose spirit of progress is accomplishing much for the city.

Tyee Webster then thanked the city for naming Tilikum place, and Tilikum John C. Slater affixed at the base of the statue a bronze tablet bearing the triangular symbol of the order and the name, "Tilikum Place."

Mayor Cotterill accepted the statue on behalf of the city. He said in part:

"Tyee Kopa Konoway, pioneers and fellow citizens: It is indeed appropriate upon this, the sixty-first anniversary of the founding of our city, that we should give honor to the great chieftain whose name the city bears, and to whose friendship its very berth is owing. With us on this platform are men and women who, as little children, were in the party which located the first settlement of what is now Seattle. With us also is a lineal descendant of that great Chief Seattle, whom we have here to honor, in the person of his great-great-granddaughter, Miss Myrtle Loughery, who will unveil the statue here before us. We are standing, and this memorial will always stand, practically on the dividing line between the donation claims of two of these pioneers who founded our Seattle sixty-one years ago, David T. Denny and William N. Bell. And this spot, then far beyond the northern borders of the little colony they founded, is today almost at the center of population of our magnificent Seattle.

"On behalf of the city of Seattle I wish to thank the gentlemen who have secured for us this memorial. I wish to thank this loyal order of the Tilikums of Elttaes, who are working in friendship and harmony for the development of our city, and for whose order this spot is named. I wish to thank the Seattle sculptor, Mr. James Wehn, who has mould-