

Wrong doing is a constant source of distress to us while right-doing is always a matter of pride and exultation which brings to us a tower of strength.

It can never be pleasant for anyone to reflect upon acts which he should not have committed, but which are charged to his account. To feel that your fellows may consider you dishonest, untruthful, lacking in real qualities of a lady or a gentleman, cannot be pleasant. To carry with one the fear that an evil deed is soon to be detected and the blame placed against the doer of the evil must, in time, become almost unbearable. How must one feel who is compelled always to the endeavor to hide something? There is always a sign of evil-doing for those who know the signs and look for them. It is possible that exactly what the deed was may not become apparent, but the effect of mental guilt will show on the face of the guilty person.

Humanity seldom becomes so hardened that Conscience is killed. The "wee small voice" is ever with us in the capacity of monitor. Do what we may, if we are guilty of evil, we hear that protesting little voice. It tells us what is right and warns us against that which is wrong. If we would listen how much better off we would be! We may fancy that we are succeeding in our attempt to hide our evil from our fellows, but we cannot hide it from our consciences, try as we may, nor can we stifle the constant murmuring of our inward monitor.

There is but one sensible way to live, just as there is but one right way to live, and that is the right way. Let us all bear this fact in mind at all times and it will bring us the respect of decent mankind and make our days longer and of greater worth. Merit is its own reward.

CHEMAWA GOES AHEAD

We take pleasure in reporting that we are progressing. We do not wish to be thought boastful or egotistical in the above sentence, but intend it as an announcement to our many good friends—those interested in the welfare of the school. There are many improvements in progress, many have already been completed, and there are yet many other plans of improvements under consideration for taking up in the near future.

Every department of the school is doing good work—academic and industrial. There is no friction, but all, from Supt. Wadsworth down to pupils, are working in harmony and are endeavoring to make good, each for himself and the institution. We extend an invitation to all to visit us and determine if the above is not true.
