THE COON

There was once a young coon that wanted to get some camas to eat. He thought of a plan to fool his grandmother by making tracks going one way. He started toward the beach and turned off and came back a different way; and then went back as before. After many tracks were made, he went to tell his grandmother.

He said "Oh, grandmother, go out and look at the many tracks going to the beach." So his grandmother went to see. While she was gone he went into the house and crawled into the basket where the camas was kept. His grandmother came in and caught him there. She was so angry that she took the coals of fire and marked him, and threw hot ashes on him, and hit him all over the face and body. The marks are still on him today.—JOSEPH JACKSON, Fourth Grade A.
