

REPRODUCTION

(Rosa Bonheur)

Rosa Bonheur was a great artist. She loved animals and the animals loved her because she was a kind-hearted girl. Rosa did not like to go to school, but she liked to draw pictures of animals. Her father thought that she would not be a great artist because she was a girl.

She loved to paint pictures of animals best of all. She had a pet lion and his name was Nero. Once she was going away to stay a little while. Before she went she put her lion in a cage to stay. While she was gone Nero got sick and blind. When she came back she saw Nero and she said to him, "Nero! my poor Nero! what has happened to you?" Then she took him back to her studio. He died not long after that.

Rosa Bonhuer won her first prize when she was nineteen years old. Her greatest picture is "The Horse Fair." She had to use a step ladder to reach some parts of it.—Lester Bellinger, Third Grade.
