
OUR BUDGET OF LORE

LOCAL AND OTHERWISE

BORN—On April 20, 1915, at Tulalip, Wash., to Mr. and Mrs. Chas. E. Larsen, a daughter.

Chemawa has enjoyed some real, live, spelling matches since our last issue. The greater the interest in matters of this kind the better.

Lincoln Day, April 15th, was fittingly observed at Chemawa. In the evening the band played a fine program of music suited to the occasion.

Strawberries are obtainable once more, for which we are thankful. It is too bad that the strawberry season is short, but this is made up for by prunes—they are here forever.

About the middle of last month Miss Brewer and Miss White went to Portland and attended performances by the Lambardi Opera Company of "Il Trovatore" and "La Traviata."

Chemawa combined with Willamette University in a field meet against O. A. C. on April 30, the contest being held in Salem. O. A. C. beat all contestants so far that we refuse to say anything farther.

Not long ago Mr. Loos had a birthday anniversary and the small boys' band made the occasion memorable by serenading him. The music and the spirit of the boys made quite an impression upon their instructor.

On April 30th Mr. Loos and his band played for a school picnic near Quinaby. Every member of the band had a fine time and the treatment accorded them certifies to the fact that they were all appreciated for the splendid music rendered.

The senior trade class at Hampton Institute includes the following Indians: Daniel N. Thomas, a Pima from Sacaton, Arizona, who is the class vice-president and a printer; Eli Bird, a Cherokee from Swayney, N. C., carpenter; Arthur Harris, a Mohave-Apache from San Carlos, Arizona, machine worker; George P. Gurnoe, a Chippewa from Bayfield, Wisconsin, printer; Amos G. Coffey, a Chippewa from Cloquet, Minnesota, a steamfitter and plumber; Tracy Miller, a Stockbridge, from Gresham, Wisconsin, steamfitter and plumber. After the unveiling of the class motto,—“Not for self, but for others,”—the Hampton Senior Tradesmen recently received the public in the well-equipped Armstrong-Slater Memorial Trade School and explained to hundreds of visitors some of the details of their shop problems. The results of work done with the trained hand and mind received warm public commendation.
