

Indian boys and girls of at least average ability in academic lines and with a marked aptness for industrial work, your opportunities for effective service are certainly unusual.

"I believe Indian schools have the greatest opportunity of any system of schools in the country today to do things worth while in education, especially along vocational lines, and I therefore appeal to you and your associates in the work to give your heartiest co-operation with the supervising superintendents, to the end that the improved opportunities and the resulting adjustment of our schools may take place immediately."—DR. ABRAHAM LINCOLN

NEW LIGHT UPON GREAT PRESIDENT

THE archivists of a nation are ever on the search for material which will throw stronger light upon the great figures of history. That of Abraham Lincoln stands heroically the most exacting tests; the clearer the light is projected and the bolder the perspective in which he is placed, the better do they serve to strengthen and magnify the personality and qualities which have accorded him the second place among America's immorals.

Some new lights upon the life and character of Abraham Lincoln are contributed by Gaillard Hunt, Litt. D., LL. D. historian and biographer, now chief of the division of manuscript of the Library of Congress, whose work has brought him as close and intimate a knowledge of America's great men as can be gleaned from their own penned words. Dr. Hunt has examined most of the important unpublished Lincoln manuscripts, and through them he has acquired a clearer view of the war President than could be obtained by most men.

"Abraham Lincoln's is the most extraordinary character which American life has ever produced," he said recently. "No other American started from such lowly origin and reached such exalted position. Several of our great men were born in log cabins. This was merely an incident of frontier life. Andrew Jackson was of very obscure birth. In fact, to this day the exact place of his birth is uncertain. He considered that he was born in South Carolina, but North Carolina has always claimed that he was born within her borders. But Andrew Jackson
