SENIOR NOTES

Effie Davis has an unusually good selection of jokes for the class program.

The amount of business on hand reminds the class of '20 that commencement is drawing near.

Four of the senior girls sang a clever parody at class meeting Friday. There was a verse for each boy.

The Seniors were pleasantly surprised to find their own blue and white decorations adorning their room on Tuesday afternoon. The Sophomores had put them up to replace their black and gold which had been in evidence for a week in honor of the cup winners.

WINONA OPEN SESSION

The Winona Literary Society gave their annual public entertainment on last Friday eve. This is the last open session of the four societies for this season. The big auditorium was resplendent with pennants of the different societies, and pink and white, colors of the Winonas. Seats were roped off for the various societies, with the colors of each, respectively.

The "Winona Processional" opened the program when the entire society of girls dressed in white wearing immense pink bows and carrying lovely garlands of pink roses marched down the main aisle in a body. The effect was inspiring. The address of welcome was given by the president, Julia Gromoff, in her usual capable manner. Little Maude Heay rendered a violin solo which captivated the audience. Maude has much musical talent and is a good student. She was obliged to respond to an encore. Edna Hill read the society paper, "The Winona Warwhoop." She gave much news of interest of ex-students, former members of the society, and various humorous touches were given here and there, and altogether it was a spicy paper, eliciting applause and merriment. The feature of the evening's performance was the farce, "Manless Marriage." Ann Sexton was the bride, Julia Gromoff, maid of honor, little Julia Keeler, flower girl, and a big array of beautiful bridesmaids, garland bearers, and everything needed for a real up-to-the-minute wedding—all except the groom and minister, who were supplied through the use of a telephone.

Nellie Braden, attired in the costume of a highlander, gave a character dance. Maude Craig gave a vocal solo in her usual charming manner. The entire setting of the stage was arranged during the play, and the effect, enhanced by the beautiful costumes of the girls as well as their effective acting, made it beautiful in the extreme and all who were fortunate enough to be present pronounced the evening's entertainment very much of a success. Mrs. Risser is advisor for the Winona Society.

LOCAL

Irving Shepard, one of our high school students who played on the Salem High School football team, was recently awarded his letter.

Another new member was recently added to the orchestra. Cruse McDaniels is playing the trombone and it adds to our organization.

Mrs. McIntosh of Wisconsin is visiting her daughter, Mrs. James. She is much impressed with "Beautiful Chemawa," also our climate.

Joe Bettles, who has charge of the hogs of the school, made a sale of several tons of bones, turning the proceeds into feed for his hogs.

The Sigma Phi girls are busy at odd times this week preparing to give their annual function in the gym on Saturday night next. Invitations are out.

The Winona Literary Society held no regular meeting on Friday as they were scheduled for an open session in the auditorium, to which they responded.

The newest baby on the campus is little Frances Elizabeth James. Mrs. Hall and the grandmother, Mrs. McIntosh, are much elated over their namesake.

Reginald Downie will have charge of the baseball squad and from the roster of candidates we shall have a fast team. The boys are out taking a few kinks out of their arms.

Captain Gus Gartiez will hold non-commissioned officers' school once a week in the gym. Gus had some experience in this line while in the army and those attending will profit by it.

Andrew Fox and Thomas Hoaglin are two of the students that are driving the government truck. Both boys are doing well. Aside from driving they are receiving instructions in taking care of the engine and keeping it in repair.

The senior domestic science girls, under Mrs. Brickell, entertained about ten Chemawa ladies at an afternoon tea on last Thursday afternoon. The refreshments and service was daintiness itself, and speaks well for the homes these girls will preside over when their school days are past.
