LITERARY SOCIETIES

Reliance

This was purely a business meeting as well as the election of officers for the next term, viz: Allan Shepard, president; Fred Wilder, vice-president; Edwin Liljegren, secretary; Arthur Johnson, treasurer; William Frazier, sergeant-at-arms; Roy Nuckolls, yell leader; Gus Gartiez, Louis Colby and James Choate, executive committee.

Nonpareil

The meeting was held in the auditorium. After the routine of parliamentary procedure and business transacted, the program was rendered by five of the senior class, who very cleverly entertained the society with a vocal solo by Mary Ware; which was followed by a play, "College Days," Margaret Chamberlin, Elizabeth Montgomery, Rose Goff and Effie Davis carrying out the various parts. It was in two acts. We feel that our society is doing good work and that all members are taking commendable interest.

Winona

The regular meeting of the Winona Literary Society on Friday evening opened with the color song. This was followed by a recitation by Ruby White. Edna Hill read several new jokes and proposed some hard riddles. Lena Cleveland and Madrona Mann gave a humorous dialogue; Viola Byers gave some very new and interesting items, including reports of three marriages of old Chemawa students. Louise Silverthorne played the mandolin and Agnes and Annie Belgarde sang a duet. Henrietta Chamberlin reported a current event; Jessie Cleveland told an Indian story from her tribe and Myrtle Muree talked on "What My Society Means to Me." After some cheers for two Winonas who had taken part in the declamation contest, the society went into business session.

INDUSTRIAL ITEMS

The farmer reports work in orchard and garden caught up and ready for the next thing.

The carpenters are busy with repairs of all kinds and have provided a neat little chicken house for the baker.

The season is approaching when energies will be directed toward screens to keep out flies and mosquitoes and ice boxes to keep the cold in.

The tailors have added much to the appearance of the boys with the new uniforms. Now they are interested in the graduates and are sure to make friends with those who wear and those who see the suits they shall make.

The painters are preparing to paint the root house, setting glass and replacing much broken glass. If the students will bear in mind that glass is expensive and not play ball close to the buildings, there will be less glass broken in the windows.

The blacksmiths are temporarily out of coal and have been helping with the athletic field and track, putting them in readiness for the spring meet. They have several wagons to repair and a number of plow parts to get ready for the spring season, as well as general work planned which will keep the entire force busy for several months.

SENIOR NOTES

The Seniors are wearing the green today.

Much attention is being given to plans for the 1920 annual.

Marina Nelson's "sacred cap of '20" is far, far too small. She says it got into the laundry by accident and shrunk. A friendly classmate suggests another reason.

A senior and a sophomore who were on the contest Thursday night were slow getting ready and got locked in McBride Hall. A passer-by heard their cries or the judges might have had two less to choose from.

At the class meeting on Friday, President Wilder gave a brief talk on some of the class duties. William Kennedy recited a funny poem, the girls' quartet sang and the program committee introduced a little novelty in a "Do-as-you-are-told" exercise. Each member of the class received a small folded paper which gave a stunt to be performed. Some of the performances created much amusement.

SEWING ROOM NOTES

The vocational classes were very much interested in their lesson on dyes.

Most of the dresses for the spring demonstration are ready for grading.

Mrs. Canfield has her hands full helping the girls with their exhibit dresses.

The first and second year vocationals are busy with their construction dresses.

A number of the vocational girls have turned out some very beautiful embroidery pieces.

The sewing room girls think the hours seem short in that department. They are always busy and are very much interested in their work.

Every Friday embroidery work is taken up in the sewing room. This gives the girls a chance to learn to embroider as well as to do plain sewing.

The gingham dresses for Company C have been started by the 1st year vocationals. The percale dresses have been finished for all three companies.
