

EDUCATION

expect this of us, to make their dreams not just a hope, but a reality. Even our good Uncle Sam, "dear ol' pal," who gives us our bread, he expects us to show him that we have really appreciated his gift, education.

Be somebody. Help yourself. Let not these opportunities slide by without so much as a side glance. Then no one will regret. Wake up to the fact that an education is a help that you need to get along in this world.

"Good Queen Bess" was the popular title bestowed on Queen Elizabeth of England.

Richard I of England was known as "Richard the lion hearted" because of his bravery. He figures prominently in Scott's novel, "Ivanhoe."

"Mad Anthony" Wayne was an American Revolutionary general, so called because of his reckless bravery.

The silk industry originated in China. According to native records, it has existed there from a remote period. A Chinese empress, very long ago, encouraged the cultivation of the mulberry tree, the rearing of the worms, and the reeling of silk. Silk was introduced into Europe from the East through the conquests of Alexander the Great. It was worn by the Romans, and in the twelfth century it was made largely by the Sicilians and Venetians. It came into common use in England in the sixteenth century.

Achilles was shot in the heel with a poisoned arrow and he died from that shot. Penthesilea was eventually slain by Achilles, the most distinguished of the Greeks for strength and bravery. The name of the Queen of the Amazons was Penthesilea. Penthesilea went to war after accidentally killing her sister with an arrow intended for a deer. She resolved to slay the bravest man in the world. This was Achilles.

The mackerel has wonderful muscles and is beautifully built for swimming. The most important mackerel fisheries are in Great Britain. Mackerel move in schools. They follow herring, pilchards and sprats, upon which they feed, and are caught in nets which they cannot see. The nets are floated in the water, hanging straight, like walls of thin cord, into which the mackerel put their heads and become entangled with their gills.

The Old Guard of Napoleon, a branch of the Imperial Guard, was founded by him in 1804. It consisted of veterans who had served in three campaigns. It figured prominently in the Napoleonic wars and made its last charge at Waterloo.

MY GIRL

I had a girl; her name was Sue;
I loved this girl and I was true.
She rouged her cheeks in harmless
frolic,
Then kissed herself and died with colic.
I got another, as all boys do;
I loved her better than I loved Sue.
She called me "King," I called her "Queen,"
And this girl died from eating beans.
And that is the way with a modern flirt:
She'll spend your money 'till you feel
hurt,
She'll love and coo and dream and
sigh,
But she'll break your heart if she has to die.

Harry Frost, writer of the above, was for some few years a student at Chemawa and there are many employes and pupils here at present who remember him well, for he is a likeable chap. At present Harry is the editor-in-chief of the Bacone Indian, the publication of Bacone College of Oklahoma. The above poem is amusing and interesting to us. As a matter of human interest it is absorbing and we are inclined to believe that since leaving Chemawa for Oklahoma Harry has developed a side of his nature undreamed-of by us—a "lady killer." Well, we wish him luck.

Do you know that—

"Sobriquet" is a French word meaning nickname. "Little Corporal" was the sobriquet given to Napoleon Bonaparte because he was only 5 feet 2 inches tall and had begun his career as a corporal.
