

ARROWS from the LONG BOW

(FROM THE QUIVER OF JOHANN CASPER LAVATER)

Anger renders the muscles protuberant; and shall not therefore an angry mind and protuberant muscles be considered as cause and effect?

Shall the open, friendly and unsuspecting eye and the open, friendly, and unsuspecting heart be united in a thousand instances, and shall we say the one is not the cause, the other the effect?

All countenances, all forms, all created beings, are not only different from each other in their classes, races, and kinds, but are also individually distinct. Each being differs from every other being of its species. However generally known, it is a truth the most important to our purpose, and necessary to repeat, that: "There is no rose perfectly similar to another rose, no egg to an egg, no eel to an eel, no lion to a lion, no eagle to an eagle, no man to a man."

Shall Nature discover wisdom and order in all things; shall corresponding causes and effects be everywhere united; shall this be the most clear, the most indubitable of truths; and in the first, the most noble of the works of Nature, shall she act arbitrarily, without design, without law? The human countenance, that mirror of Divinity, that noblest of the works of the Creator—shall not motive and action, shall not the correspondence between the interior and exterior, the visible and invisible, the cause and the effect, be there apparent?

Calm reason revolts when it is asserted that the strong man may appear perfectly like the weak, the man in full health like another in the last stage of a consumption, or that the rash and irascible may resemble the phlegmatic. It revolts to hear it affirmed that joy and grief, pleasure and pain, love and hatred, all exhibit themselves under the same traits; that is to say, under no traits whatever, on the exterior of man. Yet such are the assertions of those who maintain physiognomy to be a chimerical science. They overturn all that order and combination by which eternal wisdom so highly astonishes and delights the understanding. It cannot be too emphatically repeated that blind chance and arbitrary disorder constitute the philosophy of fools, and that they are the bane of natural knowledge, philosophy, and religion.

KEEP AWAKE

Right now, at the beginning of school, is the time to have a serious session with yourself and determine what you are going to do with this year's opportunities. It is a matter of a most serious nature to each and every student. The school offers many advantages which come to some of you for the first time, and to others, perhaps, for the last time; but in either case it is for you to decide what you will take and how you will take it.

There is always an equal chance for all who have ambition and determination, which recalls an old saw to the effect that: "There is always room at the top." Of course we all realize that this means that those who strive shall succeed, provided they continue to strive long enough. Some may say that they do not have ability, or that this thing or that stands in the way. Remember that each will profit according to his effort, and although he may not reach the heights others do, he will reach his own height, which is all that can be expected. You all have a chance to win a prize, so wake up and enter the contest. The admission is free, and a prize awaits every honest contestant.

LOCAL

Supt. and Mrs. Ryan spent last Monday in Corvallis. Mr. Ryan is endeavoring to enlist the interest of the State College authorities in our needs along the line of extension courses.

Last Sunday afternoon Chemawa was the scene of a meeting of many representatives of the various federated Indian tribes of Oregon. They were all vitally interested in federal matters in the way of claims, etc.

Supervisor Carl M. Moore, after nearly a week spent officially at Chemawa continued on north to Tulalip, Wash., during the last week-end. Mr. Moore has many friends at Chemawa who are always pleased to welcome him to our school.

Helen Munroe, a member of our last graduating class, is now diningroom matron in the service and located at Ft. Hall, Idaho. She writes that she is getting along splendidly and is very happy in her work, and we, too, are happy over her success.

Miss Dorothy Ellis, supervisor of home economics, paid us a visit recently. From here she went south and many will regret to learn that she has made her last official visit to Chemawa—at least for some time. She has accepted transfer to a district in the southwest.

Quite a number of our football fans motored to Portland last Saturday evening to attend the game between our boys and the team of Washington high school of that city. Reports have come to us to the effect that our boys made a wonderful showing against a much heavier team and they and Coach Lavelle have certainly put themselves on the football map. This was Mr. Lavelle's first game as coach at this school and we are all backing him.
