

A Busy Year

Graduating Senior Learns Scuba Diving

Scuba diving is proving to be a very enjoyable pastime for one Chemawa student. Delbert Kelley enrolled in a scuba diving class taught Tuesday evenings at the YWCA. The instructor was Mr. Dick West, a diver of the Salem Aqua Club.

The students met from 6 to 10 p.m. for seven weeks. Two hours were spent in classwork and two in the pool. The class curriculum consisted of studying the fundamentals of diving, underwater techniques, underwater illnesses, identification of harmful sea life, and many other related things.

The pool workouts involved such interesting things as tube rescue, survival swimming, learning to utilize the different types of scuba diving gear, and practicing the skills that a scuba diver has to make use of.

Delbert took his checkout dive on a cold, windy, rainy day at Yaquina Bay, Newport, Oregon.

The checkout dive was designed to show the instructor how well the students perform in an open dive.

Upon completion of the course, Delbert received an arm patch, diver's certificate, and a registration card from the National Association of Underwater Instructors, to show that he had passed the course.

Student Impressions Of Chemawa

My first impression when I arrived at Chemawa was the fact that all the students were warm and friendly. While only being here a short time I have made many friends which would have taken months in a public school.

There is a great difference between a public school and a boarding school. At a boarding school you are under much stricter rule. Everyone works together and learns to take responsibility. Everyone gets up with the sun to begin their daily schedule.

Being at Chemawa will be a wonderful experience for me. Along with all other students, I'll learn to take responsibility, learn more about my people, and most important get an education that will open the door to my future.
