

Senator McGovern Visits Chemawa

McGovern talks with students - the press listens.

The Senator takes his turn in the chow line.

Senator George McGovern paid a visit to the Chemawa campus on May 22nd of this year, the day before Oregon's Presidential primary.

Senator McGovern, now the Democratic nominee, toured the academic buildings, Mitchell Hall and the Administration Building, talked to teachers and members of the Advisory School Board and ate lunch with the students in the Dining Hall.

He also took some time to wander around the campus and talk with individual students. Classes were not in session, as it was the day before Graduation. The last edition of the American was also on the presses when the Senator arrived.

Several students collected autographs on their yearbooks and also got a chance to speak to McGovern about his campaign. Students also got a chance to meet and watch the secret service men and the small army of news reporters accompanying the campaign.

McGovern won the Democratic Primary the next day, polling over twice as many votes as his nearest competitor, Governor George Wallace of Alabama.

A student gets an autograph

Our thanks to Gerry Lewin and the Capital Journal for the pictures on these pages.

Ouchi talks - McGovern listens

Mike Williams presents a copy of The Chief