Gov. moves against crisis price gouging

By Mike Rogoway
The Oregonian/OregonLive

Oregon Gov. Kate Brown said Monday she will declare an "abnormal disruption of the market," triggering new consumer protections to prevent price gouging.

As consumers hoard toilet paper, hand sanitizer and other emergency supplies, there have been reports from around the country that people are selling such items at tremendous markups online, in stores or on the street.

The state Department of Justice said it received complaints that a pharmacy had doubled the price of toilet paper and a grocery in Central Oregon was selling alcohol and disinfectant for three or four times normal price.

Attorney General Ellen Rosenblum cited a state law that gives the governor power to declare a disruption in "any emergency that prevents ready availability of essential consumer goods or services."
