

Table with subscription rates for weekly, monthly, and quarterly payments.

After an interregnum of one week I again assume editorial control of the columns of the CHRONICLE.

Nothing seems more clearly established than that the charge that the silver legislation of 1873, whereby the coinage of the silver dollars was stopped, was procured through corrupt and secret measures, is false in every particular.

The one peculiar fault which follows, as the shadow follows the substance, the life and work of the editor of the Times-Montaigne is his implacable and unreasonably bitter hatred of every person and thing that do not fall in line with his peculiar notions or contribute to his avarice.

Efforts to organize the farmers' alliance in the southern states are not meeting with success. The press in general is fighting the movement and the Kansas politicians who have gone into the southern states on a stamping tour are meeting with a cold reception.

At the late meeting, in Minneapolis, of the National Editorial Association a number of excellent women from Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania had a paper read urging that action ought to be taken towards the suppression or amendment of all details in reporting such crimes as suicides, scandals and breaches of faith and honor.

There are frequently details in connection with the crimes mentioned that no respectable journal will publish. There are others that are just as proper subjects for publication as any matters of news that may be published.

The prospective value, to the United States, of reciprocal trade connection with the countries of Central and South America may be gathered from the fact that William Elroy Curtis prepared a statement on trade and transportation for the use of the late International American Conference, in which he enumerates as many as 425 different articles of merchandise which he found on the manifests of vessels bound for southern ports.

A forcible illustration of the folly of human greed and the inability of wealth to confer happiness comes to us through a paragraph now going the rounds of the press to the effect that John D. Rockefeller, the great Standard Oil King, who is rich beyond the dreams of Avarice, itself, has completely lost his nerve and is afraid he never will get well; the care of his vast wealth having used him up completely while as yet he is by no means an old man.

It is intimated that in a short time two of the most famous gambling institutions in the world will have ceased to exist. The Prince of Monaco, it is said, has concluded not to renew the lease of his establishment and the movement in Louisiana, to abolish the lottery company, may prove successful.

wrought an injury. In saying this, we by no means lose sight of the many important advantages we have reaped. The country has been developed in a way it could never have otherwise been, but the population of The Dalles has not been increased and if the volume of business is larger, as it undoubtedly is, it is not the railroad we have to thank for it. The day the Regulator will be able to start on her trip to the Cascades, and make connection with boats on the lower river, will be a more important one for The Dalles than was the day this city made connection with the east by a transcontinental railroad.

The one peculiar fault which follows, as the shadow follows the substance, the life and work of the editor of the Times-Montaigne is his implacable and unreasonably bitter hatred of every person and thing that do not fall in line with his peculiar notions or contribute to his avarice.

Efforts to organize the farmers' alliance in the southern states are not meeting with success. The press in general is fighting the movement and the Kansas politicians who have gone into the southern states on a stamping tour are meeting with a cold reception.

At the late meeting, in Minneapolis, of the National Editorial Association a number of excellent women from Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania had a paper read urging that action ought to be taken towards the suppression or amendment of all details in reporting such crimes as suicides, scandals and breaches of faith and honor.

There are frequently details in connection with the crimes mentioned that no respectable journal will publish. There are others that are just as proper subjects for publication as any matters of news that may be published.

The prospective value, to the United States, of reciprocal trade connection with the countries of Central and South America may be gathered from the fact that William Elroy Curtis prepared a statement on trade and transportation for the use of the late International American Conference, in which he enumerates as many as 425 different articles of merchandise which he found on the manifests of vessels bound for southern ports.

A forcible illustration of the folly of human greed and the inability of wealth to confer happiness comes to us through a paragraph now going the rounds of the press to the effect that John D. Rockefeller, the great Standard Oil King, who is rich beyond the dreams of Avarice, itself, has completely lost his nerve and is afraid he never will get well; the care of his vast wealth having used him up completely while as yet he is by no means an old man.

It is intimated that in a short time two of the most famous gambling institutions in the world will have ceased to exist. The Prince of Monaco, it is said, has concluded not to renew the lease of his establishment and the movement in Louisiana, to abolish the lottery company, may prove successful.

After all a town is surprisingly little helped by simply being a way station on a trans-continental line of railroad. It can scarcely be said, with any great degree of truth that our connection with thirtieth anniversary of the first battle of Manassas, and Lexington, the quiet agricultural village in which was spent the lifetime of Stonewall Jackson, the most picturesque figure of the Southern Confederacy, is brilliant with life and color, while ten thousand strangers have assembled within its environs to participate in the exercises incident to the unveiling of a monument symbolic of respect and veneration felt for the great soldier.

The procession first moved to the campus of the Washington and Lee University and halted at the platform, which was handsomely decorated. Rev. Dr. M. C. Hopkins, of West Virginia, who as chaplain of the 2d Virginia regiment, was with Jackson in nearly all his fights, opened the ceremonies with prayer.

The weather was fine, a fresh cool breeze tempering the rays of the sun. The streets and buildings were appropriately decorated. Three beautiful arches extended over Main street. Banners with the names of Jackson's different battles printed on them swung with a hundred yards of each other across the line of the march.

Efforts to organize the farmers' alliance in the southern states are not meeting with success. The press in general is fighting the movement and the Kansas politicians who have gone into the southern states on a stamping tour are meeting with a cold reception.

At the late meeting, in Minneapolis, of the National Editorial Association a number of excellent women from Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania had a paper read urging that action ought to be taken towards the suppression or amendment of all details in reporting such crimes as suicides, scandals and breaches of faith and honor.

There are frequently details in connection with the crimes mentioned that no respectable journal will publish. There are others that are just as proper subjects for publication as any matters of news that may be published.

The prospective value, to the United States, of reciprocal trade connection with the countries of Central and South America may be gathered from the fact that William Elroy Curtis prepared a statement on trade and transportation for the use of the late International American Conference, in which he enumerates as many as 425 different articles of merchandise which he found on the manifests of vessels bound for southern ports.

A forcible illustration of the folly of human greed and the inability of wealth to confer happiness comes to us through a paragraph now going the rounds of the press to the effect that John D. Rockefeller, the great Standard Oil King, who is rich beyond the dreams of Avarice, itself, has completely lost his nerve and is afraid he never will get well; the care of his vast wealth having used him up completely while as yet he is by no means an old man.

It is intimated that in a short time two of the most famous gambling institutions in the world will have ceased to exist. The Prince of Monaco, it is said, has concluded not to renew the lease of his establishment and the movement in Louisiana, to abolish the lottery company, may prove successful.

After all a town is surprisingly little helped by simply being a way station on a trans-continental line of railroad. It can scarcely be said, with any great degree of truth that our connection with thirtieth anniversary of the first battle of Manassas, and Lexington, the quiet agricultural village in which was spent the lifetime of Stonewall Jackson, the most picturesque figure of the Southern Confederacy, is brilliant with life and color, while ten thousand strangers have assembled within its environs to participate in the exercises incident to the unveiling of a monument symbolic of respect and veneration felt for the great soldier.

The procession first moved to the campus of the Washington and Lee University and halted at the platform, which was handsomely decorated. Rev. Dr. M. C. Hopkins, of West Virginia, who as chaplain of the 2d Virginia regiment, was with Jackson in nearly all his fights, opened the ceremonies with prayer.

The weather was fine, a fresh cool breeze tempering the rays of the sun. The streets and buildings were appropriately decorated. Three beautiful arches extended over Main street. Banners with the names of Jackson's different battles printed on them swung with a hundred yards of each other across the line of the march.

Efforts to organize the farmers' alliance in the southern states are not meeting with success. The press in general is fighting the movement and the Kansas politicians who have gone into the southern states on a stamping tour are meeting with a cold reception.

At the late meeting, in Minneapolis, of the National Editorial Association a number of excellent women from Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania had a paper read urging that action ought to be taken towards the suppression or amendment of all details in reporting such crimes as suicides, scandals and breaches of faith and honor.

There are frequently details in connection with the crimes mentioned that no respectable journal will publish. There are others that are just as proper subjects for publication as any matters of news that may be published.

The prospective value, to the United States, of reciprocal trade connection with the countries of Central and South America may be gathered from the fact that William Elroy Curtis prepared a statement on trade and transportation for the use of the late International American Conference, in which he enumerates as many as 425 different articles of merchandise which he found on the manifests of vessels bound for southern ports.

A forcible illustration of the folly of human greed and the inability of wealth to confer happiness comes to us through a paragraph now going the rounds of the press to the effect that John D. Rockefeller, the great Standard Oil King, who is rich beyond the dreams of Avarice, itself, has completely lost his nerve and is afraid he never will get well; the care of his vast wealth having used him up completely while as yet he is by no means an old man.

It is intimated that in a short time two of the most famous gambling institutions in the world will have ceased to exist. The Prince of Monaco, it is said, has concluded not to renew the lease of his establishment and the movement in Louisiana, to abolish the lottery company, may prove successful.

After all a town is surprisingly little helped by simply being a way station on a trans-continental line of railroad. It can scarcely be said, with any great degree of truth that our connection with thirtieth anniversary of the first battle of Manassas, and Lexington, the quiet agricultural village in which was spent the lifetime of Stonewall Jackson, the most picturesque figure of the Southern Confederacy, is brilliant with life and color, while ten thousand strangers have assembled within its environs to participate in the exercises incident to the unveiling of a monument symbolic of respect and veneration felt for the great soldier.

The procession first moved to the campus of the Washington and Lee University and halted at the platform, which was handsomely decorated. Rev. Dr. M. C. Hopkins, of West Virginia, who as chaplain of the 2d Virginia regiment, was with Jackson in nearly all his fights, opened the ceremonies with prayer.

The weather was fine, a fresh cool breeze tempering the rays of the sun. The streets and buildings were appropriately decorated. Three beautiful arches extended over Main street. Banners with the names of Jackson's different battles printed on them swung with a hundred yards of each other across the line of the march.

Efforts to organize the farmers' alliance in the southern states are not meeting with success. The press in general is fighting the movement and the Kansas politicians who have gone into the southern states on a stamping tour are meeting with a cold reception.

At the late meeting, in Minneapolis, of the National Editorial Association a number of excellent women from Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania had a paper read urging that action ought to be taken towards the suppression or amendment of all details in reporting such crimes as suicides, scandals and breaches of faith and honor.

There are frequently details in connection with the crimes mentioned that no respectable journal will publish. There are others that are just as proper subjects for publication as any matters of news that may be published.

The prospective value, to the United States, of reciprocal trade connection with the countries of Central and South America may be gathered from the fact that William Elroy Curtis prepared a statement on trade and transportation for the use of the late International American Conference, in which he enumerates as many as 425 different articles of merchandise which he found on the manifests of vessels bound for southern ports.

A forcible illustration of the folly of human greed and the inability of wealth to confer happiness comes to us through a paragraph now going the rounds of the press to the effect that John D. Rockefeller, the great Standard Oil King, who is rich beyond the dreams of Avarice, itself, has completely lost his nerve and is afraid he never will get well; the care of his vast wealth having used him up completely while as yet he is by no means an old man.

It is intimated that in a short time two of the most famous gambling institutions in the world will have ceased to exist. The Prince of Monaco, it is said, has concluded not to renew the lease of his establishment and the movement in Louisiana, to abolish the lottery company, may prove successful.

After all a town is surprisingly little helped by simply being a way station on a trans-continental line of railroad. It can scarcely be said, with any great degree of truth that our connection with thirtieth anniversary of the first battle of Manassas, and Lexington, the quiet agricultural village in which was spent the lifetime of Stonewall Jackson, the most picturesque figure of the Southern Confederacy, is brilliant with life and color, while ten thousand strangers have assembled within its environs to participate in the exercises incident to the unveiling of a monument symbolic of respect and veneration felt for the great soldier.

The procession first moved to the campus of the Washington and Lee University and halted at the platform, which was handsomely decorated. Rev. Dr. M. C. Hopkins, of West Virginia, who as chaplain of the 2d Virginia regiment, was with Jackson in nearly all his fights, opened the ceremonies with prayer.

The weather was fine, a fresh cool breeze tempering the rays of the sun. The streets and buildings were appropriately decorated. Three beautiful arches extended over Main street. Banners with the names of Jackson's different battles printed on them swung with a hundred yards of each other across the line of the march.

Efforts to organize the farmers' alliance in the southern states are not meeting with success. The press in general is fighting the movement and the Kansas politicians who have gone into the southern states on a stamping tour are meeting with a cold reception.

At the late meeting, in Minneapolis, of the National Editorial Association a number of excellent women from Maryland, Virginia and Pennsylvania had a paper read urging that action ought to be taken towards the suppression or amendment of all details in reporting such crimes as suicides, scandals and breaches of faith and honor.

There are frequently details in connection with the crimes mentioned that no respectable journal will publish. There are others that are just as proper subjects for publication as any matters of news that may be published.

The prospective value, to the United States, of reciprocal trade connection with the countries of Central and South America may be gathered from the fact that William Elroy Curtis prepared a statement on trade and transportation for the use of the late International American Conference, in which he enumerates as many as 425 different articles of merchandise which he found on the manifests of vessels bound for southern ports.

A forcible illustration of the folly of human greed and the inability of wealth to confer happiness comes to us through a paragraph now going the rounds of the press to the effect that John D. Rockefeller, the great Standard Oil King, who is rich beyond the dreams of Avarice, itself, has completely lost his nerve and is afraid he never will get well; the care of his vast wealth having used him up completely while as yet he is by no means an old man.

It is intimated that in a short time two of the most famous gambling institutions in the world will have ceased to exist. The Prince of Monaco, it is said, has concluded not to renew the lease of his establishment and the movement in Louisiana, to abolish the lottery company, may prove successful.

After all a town is surprisingly little helped by simply being a way station on a trans-continental line of railroad. It can scarcely be said, with any great degree of truth that our connection with Advertisement for Farm Implements, featuring Walter A. Wood's Reapers and Mowers. Includes contact information for agents and a list of products.

Advertisement for The Dalles Mercantile Co., offering a complete line of oils, grass and garden seeds. Lists various goods and services.

Advertisement for Hay, Grain and Produce, highlighting quality and delivery services. Mentions various types of hay and grain.

Advertisement for Pacific Fence Works, specializing in various types of fencing. Lists products like wire mesh and chicken wire.

Advertisement for Snipes & Kinersly, leading druggists. Lists various medicines and health products.

Advertisement for The Dalles Lumbering Co., providing building materials and lumber. Lists products like pine, fir, and oak.

Advertisement for Dry Pine, Fir, Oak and Slab Wood, offering high-quality lumber. Includes contact information for the company.

Advertisement for New - Umatilla - House, a hotel in Oregon. Lists amenities and contact information.

Advertisement for Chas. Stubling, a wholesaler and retail liquor dealer. Lists various types of liquor.

Advertisement for Milwaukee Beer on Draught, featuring a logo and contact information for the local distributor.

WON'T LET THEM FIGHT.

The Governor of Minnesota Orders Out the Militia to Prevent a Fight Between Fitzsimmons and Jim Hall.

SHERIFF'S SALE.

By virtue of an execution issued out of the Circuit Court of the State of Oregon, for the county of Wasco, I do hereby sell.

NOTICE FOR PUBLICATION.

U. S. LAND OFFICE, The Dalles, Or., July 6, 1891. Notice is hereby given that the following named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim.

NOTICE FOR PUBLICATION.

U. S. LAND OFFICE, The Dalles, Or., June 29, 1891. Notice is hereby given that the following named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim.

NOTICE FOR PUBLICATION.

U. S. LAND OFFICE, The Dalles, Or., June 17, 1891. Notice is hereby given that the following named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim.

NOTICE FOR PUBLICATION.

U. S. LAND OFFICE, The Dalles, Or., June 10, 1891. Notice is hereby given that the following named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim.

NOTICE FOR PUBLICATION.

U. S. LAND OFFICE, The Dalles, Or., June 4, 1891. Notice is hereby given that the following named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim.

NOTICE FOR PUBLICATION.

U. S. LAND OFFICE, The Dalles, Or., June 4, 1891. Notice is hereby given that the following named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim.

NOTICE FOR PUBLICATION.

U. S. LAND OFFICE, The Dalles, Or., June 4, 1891. Notice is hereby given that the following named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim.

NOTICE FOR PUBLICATION.

U. S. LAND OFFICE, The Dalles, Or., June 4, 1891. Notice is hereby given that the following named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim.