NEW YORK, Oct. 27 .- A London dispatch reports that with a view of avoiding the calamitous effects of the threatened strike among cotton operatives, the mayors of Liverpool and Manchester are trying to induce the disputants to consent to arbitration, the matter to and the Cotton Spinners' association a week from Saturday. It is believed, however, it will prove fruitless. It is estimated the threatened strike will affect 13,000,000 spindles. The Masters' Federation controls 18,000,000 spindles. The spinners of north and northeast Lancashire and Bolton are not affected by the strike, and 5,000,000 spindles in these districts will be run as usual, paying the federation fine of one farthing per spindle a week. If 13,000,000 spindles stop, 52,000 persons, a large proportion of whom are women and children, will be idle. The stock of cotton varn on hand is enough to last three weeks. If the strike continues longer, many weaving sheds will have to close. The fine of a farthing a week on each workprepared for a long struggle. Their fund already amounts to £120,000. # Dying Into Faint Echoes.

Oregonian. All over the country the "populist" campaign is waning. There are evidences of it on every hand, and in Oregon as elsewhere. We do not think the vote for Weaver and Field will be as large in Oregon as the "populist" vote was last June. The howls of calamity are perceptibly weaker. That is, the voices of the cayote statesmen (and stateswomen) are dying into echoes, fainter and fainter.

SENATOR MITCHELL'S VISIT.

Rousing Demonstration at the Court House Last Night.

A large concourse of people assembled at the Court house last evening, at which time Senator J. H. Mitchell addressed them on the live political issues of the day. The senator was introduced by a few spicy remarks from Mr. B. S. Huntington, chairman of the McKinley

Although suffering from a severe cold and sore throat, Mr. Mitchell was not mocracy and the populist party. He commenced by saying that it was not his purpose to abuse democrats or populists, but that he would endeavor to abuse their party principles as much as he could: that he did not abuse persons, but the party doctrines which he believed to be erroneous.

It was his intention to discuss some of the live issues of the day; but he had noticed that some strange changes had taken place in the democratic ranks in Oregon. The great leader of the democracy in this state had left the party and espoused the populist cause, and a candidate for the office of presidential elector on the democratic ticket had resigned and an avowed populist selected in his morning. It is beautifully located near stead. People are called on to vote for eyes red with weeping and his voice a democrat who is a populist and who is bearers will be made up of distinguished pledged to cast his electoral vote for citizens of Indiana, including General Weaver. "I want in this connection to tell my democratic friends about the Judge William Woods and Hon. E. B. upon him. All the members of the imconfine myself to the record and to call attention to some things that Weaver from Rome announces that the Pope was has said at different times in the past few years and which he has admitted to to be true."

The senator then produced the records Such members of the cabinet as were from Sep. 1870 to date, which, for want in the city called this morning and had of space today, mention of his remarks members of the cabinet were therefore ticised, in comparison with those of the

Which is right and which is wrong? Which is the most beneficial to the wage earners of this country, the democratic or republican doctrines?

The house was packed, and Senator Mitchell held his audience to the last, frequently interrupted by applause. At the close of his address Congressman Ellis was called and in a few short and pointed remarks confirmed the statements of the senator, and closed by relating a few pithy anecdotes which were well applanded.

THE BELLS BENEATH THE SEA

The sea is caim, the wind is fair, Nor ever a cloud doth lower—
The good ship speeds with the blessed bells
She bears to Boltreaux tower. The pilot crossed his breast, and cried:
"Thank Godi the harbor's near,
For vesper belis at Tintagel
Ring out their music clear.

"Aye, thank the Lord for our good speed Across the doubtful seal" Across the doubtful sea!"
"Fool!" aneered the captain, "thank thyself:
God holds no helm for thee."
The pilot crossed his breast, and cried,
"God pardon thee once more,
And grant that we may safely come
Unto the Cornish shore."

The captain's oath was on his lips, Or ever the sun went down. And while the people thronged the cliffs Above the harbor town,

A mighty wave swept o'er the sea, With dull and sullen roar; The good ship trembled all her length As she sank to rise no more Then o'er the whelming waters pealed (As tolling funeral knells For those lost souls) the soft, sweet chimes

Of the Forrabury bells. The moss creeps over Boltreaux church, Where rings no vesper lay; Still waits the tower its blessed bells,

And silent stands today. For low beneath the Cornish wave, Where tangled wrecks lie deep, The Forrabury bells are hid And their sweet echoes keep.

But ever 'gainst the billows toes, And storm winds shrick in glee; Their muffled chimes the blessed bells Still ring beneath the sea.

"The knight of the throttle was a careful man, but he knew that the United States mail was being delayed and a couple of hundred passengers were angrily demanding that the trainmen do something to hurry them on. 'I'll go you.' he said, and the engine went down to the turntable to turn around. Upon coming back it was discovered that it would be impossible to couple her to the hind end of our train, as the sleeper draft irons were of a different pattern and higher than the coupler of the engine. Another pause for deliberation.

"Finally the conductor advised the engineer to go back, turn around and couple on in the original position. 'We'll just cross over on the spur and back up the fourteen miles.' And we did. That stretch of fourteen miles on a night as dark as pitch, over an unknown road, without a headlight and with 200 passengers unaware of the risk the trainmen were running to accommode accommo date them and-well, I tell you it was exciting. I've done a little railroading in my time and have taken a train over some risky places, but that fourteen miles of backing up without orders, without a headlight to aid our progress and on a strange track, is about the most squeamish ride I ever traveled. That shows you how many risks a railroad man will take to please the travelers."-Chicago News.

A Charming Little Pet. A charming little foreign pet for the house is the suricate. This pretty creature, which, if we remember rightly, was among the number of Frank Buckland's animal companions, is an active and vivacious little fellow, some ten inches long, with greenish brown fur, large bright eyes, a short pointed nose and dainty paws, which, like the squirrel's or raccoon's, are used as hands, to hold, to handle and to ask for more.
