LIFE IN MICHILAGUA.

Queer Things to Be Seen in the Central American Republic Pictures are everywhere, says a writer in the Century; women bearing burdens on their heads, their draperies blown into action, and their usually sarong and beautiful figures necestuated by the gentle trade-winds; bathers and washerwomen on the beach, the sunlight glancing from their wet bronzed bodies and coal-black hair, relieved against the deep blue of the sky, and reflected in the waters of the lake and the white of the incoming waves; the market places: the ham-mocks full of naked and sleeping bubies; the beautiful young girls; the withered and wrinkled erone sucking her eigurette as she crouches over her paster for Shootly and Mitchell. He de- spark of a charcoal fire, surrounded by her pots and pans; the islands of the lake; the volcanoes; the tropical richness of the cultivated country, with its feathery palms and orchids; or the weird, lonesome, gloomy jungle, with its majestic trees and festooned vines. Here is a young boy selling pineap-ples; he wears nothing but a breechcloth. Here comes a girl who is a perfect scheme of color, her bronze face. black hair, yellow-white chemise, red rebozo full of quality, and her brown skirt and sandals covered with dust You watch her until she turns the cor ner, and you have half a mind to follow for one more giance; but look in another direction, and behold! something equally fine is before you. Maybe it is a fine young senor, with a mane of black hair about his forehead and sticking out from under his hat-brim. Mitchell will be a place of some note, his mustache twisted into saucy curls. sword at his side, and his game-cock under his arm. The soldiers, too, are picturesque. They are always expect-ing a revolution, when life is eventful: but in times of peace, the arresting of stray pigs, goats, etc., is about all they have to do. They are small men, but look like good material, and I have no

ONE MILLION LOBSTERS.

There is a lobster farm-or pound, as

Southport, Me. The Boston Globe deis formed by building a solid dam neross a tide-water cove. This dam and was here two years ago on a visit to but across the top is placed a fence of iron rods, preventing the lobsters from ness is most brisk. When the fishermen bring the lobsters to the pound. the "fish," as they are called, are hoisted to the dam, measured, and those which are more than ten and onehalf inches long, the legal limit, are Captain Sweeney, U. S. A., San thrown in. If a lobster is clever his out with a drag seine and packed in a barrel, with a piece of ice for a pillow and sent to Boston. The seine is made of stout twine and is weighted at the bottom with a heavy chain. Along the top is a row of cories, which sustain the weight of the seine while the chain drags on the bottom of the pound. A single cast of this seine will bring up lobsters enough to fill eleven barrels. The chain as it sweeps along the bottom stirs up the lobsters, which immediately shoot backward into the slack twine. In taking them out the men wear heavy mittens, though even then they are often nipped. In the pound the lobsters are fed salt herring, men rowing about in skiffs and pitching the herring overboard. This is called "feeding the chickens." and it takes about six barrels to make a light iuncheon for the flock. There are said to be a number of old hardshells in the Southport farm which for years have evaded the casts of the drag. Two of enormous size have become quite tame and crawl about in the shallow water. The age of the lobster is a debated question. The small marketable specimens are generally supposed to be from four to six years old, but some lobsters are believed to live to the green old age of twenty-five

For the first quarter of 1993 the new industries established in the south exceed those of the first quarter of 1892 by 198. The report prepared by the Chattanooga Trudesmun says there has been a marked increase in the establishment of wood-working plants and cottonseed oil mills.
