Iceland is little better than a desert. The peculiar configuration renders intercourse difficult, and, along with the barrenness of the soil, makes the conditions of existence strangely hard. People with so little to make life attractive might be pardoned if they were alive, says the Atlantic.

It is a pleasure to state that this last senseless move is opposed, not only by all merchants and citizens of the town generally, but by some members of the council as well. But pending a repeal of the obnoxious measure, the wrong chould not be permitted to exist in a single instance. The marshal will probably, as it is his duty to do, notify all teamsters to confine themselves to gallons of water. the space assigned them by the city, or suffer the impounding of their animals. The CHRONICLE believes the measure to be unlawful, and a trial for damages against the city should be made by the ters of an inch deep first farmer who is interfered with. row strip of pasture land extending like a green girdle round the coast and up the deep, narrow flords. The in- tolerant of their presence, and anxious terior of the country is a howling waste of sand and ice, traversed by darting glacial rivers and utterly incapable of supporting more than a few scattered inhabitants. Grass is the only consid-erable crop. The hills and valleys are treeless and afford at best but scanty maturage for horses, cows and sheep. Roads and bridges scarcely exist.

A Danish merchant at Reykjavik has a wheeled carriage, but in the interior such a conveyance is unknown and would be useless if known. The backs of horses are the only means of transportation across country. Small boats carry travelers over dangerous rivers. while the horses swim on ahead. Hardly anything that ministers to comfort. to say nothing of luxury, is produced in Iceland. Every nail in an Icelandie house, every pane of glass, every bit of wooden flooring, every insignificant bit of furniture, has to be transported laboriously from one of the seaports to its destination.

That the Icelanders are poor goes without saying. There is little or no home market, for every lociander has the same products to sell as his neigh-The circulation of money is. therefore, very small. If a farmer has direct dealings with the agents for foreign markets, and is sufficiently prosperous to have a little surplus each year, he may handle a little money, but in general the trading at the seaports is literally trading. An Icelander bar-ters a certain number of horses or sheep or rolls of dried fish or bales of hay for a supply of groceries and other necessaries of life.
