One of the most difficult problems the old citizen can be asked to solve The kind of hand that will fill the bill Our American liberties are in peril. is the present position of the river toward the commerce of the city. A quarter of a century ago, says the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, it was every-thing. It was both the feeding and distributing artery. People engaged in building, locating for life, could see vised that business would soon be going west they could only respond by the question: "Do you see that river? Is it going to move?" Created avenues of trade were just beginning to receive attention, due to the rivalry of other points which were not blessed with a natural highway. The possescommerce had, in fact, made the averdainful of the created avenue. Life that did not begin and end on the river was not worth talking about. The travel. Those outside of a palace may feel Shakespeare's sentiment: "There's such divinity doth hedge a king;" but it is hardly possible to those inside. One of the Scotch commissioners to negotiate a union between Scotland and England, Sir John Clerk, could not have felt it during an official interview with Queen Anne, of whom he gives "Her majesty was laboring under a fit of the gout, and in extreme pain and agony, and on this occasion everything about her was much in the same disorder as about the meanest of her subjects.
