"PAPA FLEUTELOT," MISER.

A French Millionaire Who Begged in the Streets and Died in Fifth.

A miser of the story-book type died a few weeks ago in Auxerre. France Although he never had wife or children he was known to all the persons in the city as "Papa Flentelot." He had been a public figure for a generation, and could be seen daily, in storm or sunshine, tottering in his rags through the streets to gather odd bits of coal and wood and eigar stumps. When he began his work in the city there were the usual rumors that he was rich and miserly, but they were soon dispelled by the abject filth and want in which he lived, and by his imimportunity in begging.

Papa Flentelot died in his eightyfifth year, and was buried in the pot-ter's field. The French police, who suspect everything, still suspected the old man's pretenses of poverty, despite the recent shifting of public opinion. and they searched the but in which he had lived and died. Filth was ankle deep upstairs and knee deep in the The first search was rewarded bottles of Bordeaux, vintage of 1790. The second search, however, revealed a hole in the cellar wall behind a pile of indescribable dirt. From this hole the police dragged a chest, and in the in stock companies and title deeds. CURIOUS PLANT PROPAGATION.

How Branches Are Removed from the Parent Stem.

Some very curious processes for propagation are practiced at the publie gardens. One consists in cutting with a knife a ring around a branch of a plant. One might imagine, says the Washington Star, that the intention was to kill the branch, but such is by no means the object in view. The cut having been made, a piece of wet moss is wrapped and tied around the branch at that point. Beneath this protection the sap exudes from the wound, and little rootlets are developed. After a few days the branch is cut away from the parent stem, being then Itself a complete plant, with roots, all ready to put in a pot.

This plan is adopted with plants of slow growth, because one plant may thus be split up into half a dozen or more of good size, instead of waiting for a seedling or little slip to develop. A modification of the same proce consists in placing a small pot full of earth around the cut place on the branch, fastening it in position. When roots have developed the branch is cut off just below the pot, and a new plant is produced. If the gardener chooses to take the trouble he can make a separate plant out of every bud on a tree In fact, an eminent botanist has said that every tree is a village, each bud being an individual.
