Secretary E. C. Masten, of the Oregon immigration board, says all information received by the board indicates that there will be a large immigration to this coast from the middle and western states, this winter and during the coming year. California and several of the southern states are making strennous efforts secure as much of this immigration as possible, having active agents at work distributing immigration literature in large quantities. Quite a large number of inquiries in regard to this state are being received by mail, but the board's suppply of literature is Oregon will secure a small part of this immigration, but if further efforts are made and the board receives necessary support a large proportion of it could be secured, as the good crops of everything raised in Oregon this season has attracted the attention of many who have lost their harvests through drouth, etc.
