IT SHOULD PASS.

Senator Mitchell's bill to amend the constitution so as to provide for the election of United States senators by popular vote, ought to pass. There is no reason why the election of the senators whould be delegated to the legislatures, and there are many reasons why they should not be. The present deadlock in Salem is a case in point. Here at our own capital we have the spectacle of a party being placed in power by an overwhelming majority of the votes of the people, and in an overwhelming majority as regards legislative votes, frittering away time that is costing the people $200 an hour, and that should be devoted to law making, in an apparently hopeless quarrel. That quarrel is based upon a dispute as to what the people want. Each side claims to represent the people, and there seems to be no way of settling the matter. Had it been left to the people themselves instead of being delegated to the peoples' representatives, the matter would have been settled the way the people wanted it. Another reason is that under the present system the senate is composed largely of men of great wealth or else men who represent not the people but the great corporations. This condition of affairs is becoming a menace to our institutions and a rock upon which the good ship of state will wreck if the rock is not removed.

There is a question before this people now that is forging to the front as the vital one. More important than the tariff; more important than the financial question, and that is the establishing of the respective rights of labor and its creature-capital. We are not cranky as concerns corporations. We recognize their importance and their necessity. We know that individual wealth cannot carry out the great business of the country, and that corporations by which vast sums can be gathered and controlled are a feature of modern civilization that cannot be dispensed with. They are necessities, the creature of the laws and must not be preventing his seeing the principal allowed to become the creators of them. It is for our legislative bodies and for congress principally, (because the larger corporations are national in their ramifications) to say how far the right of the corporations to levy tax upon the public passes from one extreme to the other. shall extend. It is for them to limit the powers of these aggregations of capital, and to hedge about and protect the rights of the citizen and the laborer. It will not do for this task to be placed in the hands of corporation attorneys, or corporation officers. The representatives of the whole people, and they alone, should be allowed to undertake this difficult task.

This country has prospered under a protective tariff system, and it has moved along under free trade. It prospered when silver was at a premium, it will prosper with silver at a discount when some settled financial and revenue policy shall be established, but the conflict between capital and labor is irrepressible and must be fought to a finish. Neither can exist without the other and ch know this, but as long as greed exan corporate greed nothing is not be left to the e stronger that placed you here placed me here." "That may be," said the onion, "but I was never so put upon in my life. Methinks from your offensive smell that you have not washed your feet for a year." "Smell! is it you say? O'ds fish! but you are no violet! You've a breath on you like a free trade argument." "You are beneath my notice," said the thoroughly enraged onion, "and were it not for the offensive effluvium, I should turn my back upon you to some purpose. As it is, how can I hope to escape your presence, which makes itself known as offensively as one of your deceased cousins, the mackerel, when exposed to the moonlight, and which the longer it is ignored the worse it smells." "Its 16 to 1," retorted the codfish, "you have never associated realize that you are somewhat of a stinkard' yourself." "I shall appeal to the cook to remove you," growled the onion. But at that moment the cook appearing, without more ado, popped both onion and fish into the slop bucket remarking that that rotten onion and decayed fish were spoiling the pantry and ruining everything in the house.

Moral-Of two evils take neither, but elect the senator yourself.

THE TOWERING HAT.

Miss Fay Fuller, of the Pendleton Tribune, scores the legislators of New York for undertaking to pass laws upon so paltry a thing as the average theater hat worn by ladies. Miss Fuller takes the ground that "the fashion is a passing one," and that "at the worst comparatively few women offend." This assertion proves simply that Miss Fuller is young, and also that she has not devoted much time to the study of that paltry object, the theater hat. Ever since we can remember, the hat, as sported by the female theater-goer, has been a nuisance and an eyesore, and we do not now remember a play that we have seen as well as heard since the days of our kidhood, when we could climb into some place where the hat could not. Indeed, the hat, or the headgear, of the theater-going female has been a nuisance time immemorial. The primitive inhabitants of New Amsterdam had an ordinance against high coiffures. Ben Johnson ridiculed it. Praed dressed one of his heroines up as being a theater-going lady, who "Hawked and hunted in all weathers, And stood six feet, including feathers.

The subject, if traced back, can be followed into the remotest ages of antiquity. Sesostrotis killed her husband, the king, when she got a high crown on. Ham got black in the face trying to see over his wife's Easter bonnet when he was watching for the dove to return to the ark; and it is probable that the reason Adam did not catch on, and so prevent the success of the wiles of the serpent, was because of Eve's high hat

The high hat at the theater is an unmitigated nuisance, that is passing only in the sense that it passes from one tash ion to another, but unfortunately never

ST. VALENTINE'S DAY.

Tomorrow. Valentine, the patron saint all lovers, especially amateurs, will receive proper recognition all over the civilized world. The handsome souvenir, telling of leve, will rest in the mailsacks alongside of the gaudily-colored caricature, telling of envy, malice, or spite. How the day came to be kept in the way it is, is more than anyone knows. St. Valentine himself is rather an uncertain personage, as it is hard to tell which Valentine the day is kept for. It is sometimes ascribed to Pope Valentine, who occupied the papal chair for thirty or forty days about the year 827, and of whom some one with A. P. A. proclivities, many years ago, remarked that "He was too good a man to make a with respectable people, or you would good pope, and so he died within forty days of his assuming the office." St. Valentine's day was not kept on his account, however.

The name is, or was a very common one, and we find on going back into the time of the Emperor Claudius (Gothicus) that there was another Valentine, who was a presbyter and martyr. According to the Roman legend he was arrested by Claudius, and handed over to Calphurnius, who employed Asterius to win him back to idolatry. Instead of doing so the good Saint Valentine miraculousty restored the sight of Asterius' blind daughter, and so converted him to Christianity. After Asterius' failure to shake his faith, St. Valentine suffered martyrdom being beaten with clubs, and finally beheaded in the Flammian Way Feb. 14th. Another Valentine has a somewhat similar history. He also was a preacher and cured the deformed son of Craton, a Greek rhetorician living at Rome, who with many other prominent persons, was converted. He too suffered martyrdom, and being All of. sainted, his day is kept with that of the other Valentine, Feb. 14th. So it will be seen the day has two patron saints at least.

It was perhaps on account of the day having two or more patron saints that it was selected as the day in which happy love might give vent to its feelhappy love might give vent to its feel-ings, for the wise heads who selected it All of..... knew that where trundle bed love existed and youthful affections were given day is one of joy to the young folks and of terror to the postal department. The last end of the eastern blizzard has struck us in the form of two bitter nights and a two-inch fall of snow that covered what bare spots there were. We long for the soft breath of the persuasive Chinook; but like spring, she is rather shy and distant. Wednesday old Sol put on a smile of summer radiance, and poked out his head from behind a dark cloud, warming the early birds, who returned thanks in a burst of summer song that made a painful contrast with the bare trees and snow-covered earth.

A great deal of sickness is the result of the prolonging of winter, giving the doctors plenty of work, and making them glad while all else is sad. Mrs. Mary Vanderpool has been very sick with a bad attack of pneumonia, but is improving under the care of Dr. Kane. Miss Blanche Dufur, we regret to state, has been sick, but is a little better.
