ATLANTA AND CHICKAMAUGA.

The South is in the saddle today; not in the offensive sense that this express sion was used forty years ago; but in its new reading, when it means that the eyes of the country are turning southward, where two great scenes are being enacted. The opening of the Atlanta exposition, which occurred today, and the declaring of the Chickamauga battle field a national park, which in another are doing, are stepping siones in the latter history of the South. The Atlanta exposition will show, as nothing else could do, the wonderful industrial development which the southern states have undergone, and gives evidence that the new life of that favored region is but beginning. In a different manner, but still closely allied in effect, the meeting of the Union and Confederate remnants today at Chickamauga marks an epoch in southern history. When the soldiers of both armies can meet on a common battlefield, one that represents angry strife and deadly conflict, and shake hands in brotherly spirit, then no other signs are needed to tell, in language unmistakable, that the chasm that so long existed between the North and the South is bridged; more than that it is closed. The North is the guest of the South today. Atlanta throws open its doors to the wide pouring-in of a multitude. The products of not only the southern states, but many of the North, are displayed, to teach the wonderful progress of time.

From now till the close of the year the throngs that visit Atlanta will go away more firmly convinced that the South was worth fighting to save. Although shorter in time, the meeeting on Chickamauga's field, once reddened with patriotic blood, should be as memorable in history as the struggle itself. It is a coincidence that two such events, fraught with such memories and hopes for the South, should occur on the same day-the closing of the old life and the beginning of the new.

Before the recent yacht contest Lord self persona grata to the people of America. His pluck and perseverance in refusing to give up till he had exhausted all means of taking back to England the coveted cup, had caused him to be the recipient of many kind words from Americans, who admire a game fighter better than an easy winner. But the English nobleman has thrown a new light upon himself in his action in refusing to finish the prescribed races. It is evident on all sides now that the crowding of the excursion boats was a subterfuge to allow the Valkyrie to withdraw from a contest in which she was sure to have been beaten. The sympathy for Lord Dunraven will not be so lavish as it would have been had he taken a different course of showing the superiority of the Defender.

HOW EXPORTS INCREASE.

On whatever other point doubt may yet remain, it is now beyond controversy that the new tariff, lame and halting as it is in its application of the free raw material principle, has still done an important something toward unlocking the gates of foreign markets to our manufactured goods .- Baltimore Sun.

It seems a pity to spoil this self-congratulation. But, then, the editor should have referred to the statistics of the treasury department and he would have found, in the report of last June, the statement of our exports of manufactured goods for 1894 at $183,718,484, and for 1895 at $183,595,743, or $122,741 less than in 1894. This is "beyond controversy." Too much dependence should not be paid to the bald misstatement made by Prof. Wilson in the World .- Economist.

The Atlanta exposition will not attract the widespread interest that the world's fair did, because it is not planned on so large a scale; but there are many features connected with the Atlanta enterprise which will attract attention. Of much importance commercially is the Pan American feature, which is a move American republics into closer business relations with the United States. The promoters of the exposition believe a great opportunity is present to attain this excellent object, and will use every endeavor to bring the project to successso often in the mind of the late Secre- tangle to straighten out.

The Weekly Chronicle. tary Blaine, and might have been called his pet hobby. To see the trade of the United States widen and grow with the this month. The fastest horses will countries that, together with this, constitute the great American continent, was the dream of Blaine's latter days. Had he lived and the republican policy, continued, the plan of reciprocity would have been far greater developed. If the Atlanta exposition succeeds in following the directions the great statesman gave, and brings the countries south of us in closer touch with our own, a great work will have been accomplished.

The republicans of New York have held their convention, and, like the republicans of Pennsylvania, whatever differences in the party may have existed, they were settled by wise counselship, and the meeting proved a harmonions one. The resolutions adopted commend the work of the police commission in New York City; commend the administration of Governor Morton, and formally launch his candidacy for president. There is little doubt now but that the venerable governor will have the support of a solid New York delegation in the national convention, but that will be all his following. Morton's candidacy is not sincere, and he has placed bimself in the hands of Platt only to be used as a convenient article of barter. The republicans of the country want an enthusiastic campaign, and state the veterans of the blue and gray they can better secure it under other leadership than Morton's.

MORE STATISTICS.

The New Orleans Times-Democrat, a paper noted for the accuracy of the statistics which it gathers and publishes from time to time, has lately made a comparative statement of the progress of the South in the past fifteen years. By the term South, it denotes the thirteen states south of the Potomac and the Ohio, from Virginia to Texas. In this region from the year 1880 to 1895, the manufacturing establishments have increased from 34,565 to 59,176, and the capital invested from $179,336,240 to $559,467,500 The number of hands had more than doubled, and the wages more than trebled. The cultivated land has increased from 34,679,145 acres to 59,-462,672, while the value of farm products has risen in about equal proportion from $611,699,145 to 976,463,500. The number of farms has increased from coinage of silver has decreased until 1,726,480 to 2,402,672.

These statistics and those relating to the coal and iron of the South, are interesting as showing a steady progress along lines of manufacturing, and testify that the change from the primitive fir," easily leads. dependence upon agriculture alone, is Seattle Times: It appears that, from giving place to diversified industries the Methodist ministers' view of it, without impairing or curtailing the proper progress of agriculture. The one is progressing without injury to the other. It is probable the resources of the Lord loveth He chasteneth." the South will reach still greater development in the next fifteen years than it opment in the next fifteen years than it has in the past. More surely will this Cleveland will be the democratic nombe the result if the South aids in adoptinee. Stranger things have happened, ing the protective policy, which in the Dunraven had succeeded in making himprogress the South has made will make will do with or for the democratic party.

OREGON SCHOOLS.

With commendable enterprise the Eugene Register has published a University of Oregon edition. Three large pages are devoted to a history of this excellent institution. The story of its struggles from the founding, in 1873, to the present, is told in complete detail. The state university is the brightest star in the educational firmament of details. Opening of the Convention

The opening exercises of the Christian Eendeavor convention last night in the Christian church, were attended by a select audience. The house was crowded to its fullest capacity. The church was prettily decorated with plants and flowers. Upon the platform were seated H. C. Bateham, president of the convention, Rev. W. C. Curtis, of The Dalles Congregational church, Rev. J. L. Hershner, pastor of the Congregational church at Hood River, and Rev. W. T. Kentner of Salem.

The exercises were opened by a song service in which the delegates and audience took part. Rev. W. C. Curtis then Inter Ocean: If Japan wants fast delivered an address of welcome, in which he extended the hand of hospitality to the visiting delegates. The response to Mr. Curtis' kind words was made by Rev. J. L. Hershner of Hood River, who in an able address spoke of the aims of the Christian Endeavor Society and thanked the people of this city for their hearty reception.

After an anthem sung by Mrs. Huntington, Mrs. Varney, Miss Schmidt, Miss Sampson, Miss Patterson. Mr. Mc-Lafferty, Dr. Doane, Mr. Davenport and Mr. Crandali, the president introduced the Rev. W. F. report was then read by Miss Aldrich. The treasurer's report was not burdensome, as it showed that the receipts just equalled the disbursements, since there were none of either.

The election of officers was the next order of business, and when the returns were in, the following were declared elected: President, A. G. Hoering, The Dalles; vice president, F. C. Cole, Cascade Locks; secretary, Miss Etta Story, The Dalles; treasurer, Alice Clever, Hood River. After the business of the convention for the morning was concluded, a conference of the secretaries was held, under the leadership of E. H. Merrill, and a similar meeting of the Lookout committees, presided over by Mr. Batcham. The conference of prayer meeting committees was led by Mrs. J. L. Hershner of Hood River. The morning's session proved very entertaining to those who attended, and all the delegates are taking great interest in the deliberations. As the afternoon session did not begin till 2 o'clock, the report of the proceedings will have to be delayed till tomorrow's CHRONICLE.
