The receipts of wheat were not as large today as previously during the week. The teams from a long distance do not generally arrive in town Saturday. The price here still remains unchanged, though it dropped a half a cent in Portland yesterday. From 41 to 43 cents is the price being paid, the mill offering free ferriage to Klickitat farmers.

This morning a riderless horse appeared at the house of Mr. Paulsen, in the garrison. He was saddled and bridled, and to the saddle was tied a man's coat. There was no way telling where the animal came from. The horse was an iron-gray, branded with what appeared to be a.C on the left shoulder.

An unusual sight was witnessed by the people along Union street this afternoon, when a band of 400 fine looking cattle were driven to the ferry. They were purchased in Crook and Gilliam counties by a Montana gentleman and were being taken to Yakima, where they will be shipped by train to the Montana range. A great many cattle are brought to The Dalles in the course of a year, but most of them go to the stockyards at the east limits of town and so large a number taken through the streets is something of a rarity. Ben. Snipes, the veteran cattle king of the Northwest, was among those who watched the cattle driven on the ferry boat, as force of habit would bring him to where stock was being driven.

George Herbert lost his wonted geniality yesterday for a time and there is no telling what he would have said had anybody been present to hear him. The way it happened was this. Mr. Herbert was coming from Grants to The Dalles on a freight train yesterday, and the train stopped a couple of miles this side of Celilo to make some repairs to the engine. As both the brakemen were busy, George was asked to walk up the track around a curve, and flag any train that might approach.
