The music for the dance will start promptly at 8:30 this evening. The management hope to see a large attendance tonight. After such a successful week the fair should be wound up in a fitting manner. Admission 50 cents; ladies free.

The pavilion was thronged with spectators last evening. Fully 600 people viewed the exhibits. The display will long remain in the memory of the people who witnessed it. The one next year will have to be a splendid one in order to surpass this year's.

In the case of the State vs. Julius Rothermal which was argued and submitted vesterday, Justice Davis rendered a decision binding the defendant over to the action of the grand jury. This ends the first part of a rather celebrated or at least peculiar case.

The fruit dryer belonging to the Smith Bros., whose place is up Mill reek, burned to the ground yesterday. It is not known exactly how the blaze started, but was probably due to the furnace getting too hot. No one was around the dryer when it caught fire good things, amongst which will be and when aid arrived the whole concern was wrapped in flames. The damage will be considerable.

The Regulator was delayed long enough this morning on her down trip to tow the pile driver, which has been working at Rockland, over to this side of the river. The piling is all driven and little time will be lost in completing the remainder of the job.

The trotters which have been in attendance at the fair were taken to Portland by boat this morning. Condee, Almax, Carle Carne and Blondie were the ones shipped. It was thought for a while that these trotters would go to the Heppner fair, but the owners decided otherwise.

The weather for the middle of October is unusually warm and the days have almost a summer heat. The unusual temperature is due, so the scientists say, to the presence of a comet somewhere in the neighborhood of the earth. It was such a phenomena, according to Ignatius Donnelly, which marked the year of 1871, when the Chicago fire and other large conflagrations occurred throughout

Some of the witnesses failing to arrive in the case of the State vs. Bullock, which was called at 2 o'clock, Justice Davis ordered a postponement.

Justice Davis today admitted Julius Rothermal to bail in the sum of $250, August Buchler and George A. Liebe signed as sureties. Rothermal was recently bound over to await the grand jury upon the charge of larceny.

Secretary Mack is busy figuring up the receipts and disbursements of the late fair. As all the bills have not yet been presented it is impossible to tell just what the financial outcome of the meeting was. It is confidently expected however, the fair will make an improved financial showing over last year.

It is expected the new dock on the other side of the river will be far enough advanced by tomorrow evening to admit of the reception of wheat. The old grade, which 'for many years has been disused, has had a great deal of work put upon it, and will be used by the wheat teams in delivering at the new dock. Rockland will become an important landing for the Regulator.

Fair week has been followed by a period of quiet in the police court. No hoboes were up for trial this morning. The only subject for judicial action was Emma Carnes, one of the women of the town, who plead guilty to being an inmate of a house contrary to the city ordinances and was fined $15 for such offense. She paid the fine and was allowed to go. The city treasury has been considerably increased by fines of this sort during the past week.

The meeting of the anbscribers to the Sherman county road falled to materialize last night. No one had taken upon himself the responsibility of seeing that the council chambers were unlocked and lighted; so when several business men gathered around they could not obtain admittance. Mr. Barzee, the gentleman from Sherman county who has been pushing the matter of the road, was considerably disappointed at not being able to meet our citizens, but he was assured that another meeting will be called and some one appointed to represent the people of The Dalles in the building of the road. The business men of this city have responded liberally to the request for assistance, and every dollar that was subscribed will be paid. It would be wise to have a meeting held in the early future to select some man who will represent The Dalles merchants in the road. The enterprise is a too important one for the commercial interests of The Dalles to allow any cessation of interest in the matter.

Some teamsters who were in the city today made complaints about the abominable condition of the grade leading from the top of the Klickitat mountain to the foot on this side. The sheep which have been driven over the road have caused a lot of loose rock to fall upon the grade till the teamsters say it is almost impassable. The gentleman's roadster race Satur day drew out a large attendance at the fair grounds. The weather was a continuation of the beautiful sort that marked the latter part of the week. McInerny's John Day, Lou Washbourne's Kisber, J. F. Moore's Wilkie and M. A. Moody's Pet. The track was not wide enough to admit of all the trotters to start even so the judges arranged them in two columns of four abreast. Pearl Knox took the lead in the first heat and set the pace, but her breaking allowed Kisber to take the front place, which he held to the finish, making the half mile in 1.35, Pet 2nd, John Day 3rd and Pearl Knox 4th. The second heat Kisber also won 'by even trotting, keeping his feet from start to finish; time, 1.31, John Day obtained 2nd place, Pet seemed to have taken advantage of the 3rd and Pearl Knox 4th. Lived Near Goldendale.

Yesterday's Oregonian contained an item relative to the finding of a suicide's body in Portland. The victim seems to have been the husband of Mrs. A. J. Naylor, who has been stopping at Mrs. Obarr's hotel in the East End. One day last week Mr. Navlor, whose home was on a ranch nine miles from Goldendale, bade his wife good bye, saying he was going for a short visit with a neighbor. He left the house, and that was the last his wife saw of him. After a day's absence Mrs. Naylor became alarmed, and finding no trace in the neighborhood, she came to The Dalles and instituted active inquiries concerning her missing husband. Nothing was learned that gave any clew to his whereabouts till the item in yesterday's paper. The description tallied so closely with that of Mr. Naylor that his wife was confident it was her husband. A telephone message was sent to the police authorities in Portland giving additiona details of description, and an answer was received which set at rest all doubts in the matter. As Mrs. Naylor was the imposing monument over Major bereft of money, an amount was made Trevitt's remains on a barren island. up among the people who knew the circumstances sufficiently large to take her ness and bravery done by this hardy passenger.

His Memory Recalled by a Visit of His

The following taken from the La Grande Chronicle may be of interest to residents of The Dalled who remember Victor Trevitt in kindly thought:

The news of the arrival in this city of Mrs. Trevitt, widow of the late Major Trevitt, brings to mind many interest ing events in the history of that well-known pioneer. He braved the dangers of the frontier to hew out a fortune for himself, but like nearly every one of his kind, he was unsuccessful in his declining years. The hardships were so many and the obstacles placed in the way of making large fortunes so great, that of the thousands who followed the star of the empire west, very few made inde-pendent fortunes. Today Major Trevitt lies in a well-marked grave upon an island washed by the waters of the mighty Columbia river. An elegant and impos-ing monument marks his last resting place and all who travel from The Dalles to Cascades either by boat or rail can see membrance of the many deeds of kindcitizen in Oregon.
