What the Kansan Remembers of Garfield.

This Clearly Shown by His Attitude Before Nomination-He Was Incapable of Intrigue.

CHICAGO, Nov. 28 .- John J. Ingalls, of tory of Garfield's nomination, a history that Senator Sherman's book is drawing from the lips of American statemens and nected with the Garfield episode, Mr. Ingails said:

"I happened to be in Washington on business when Garfield died in September, 1881, and was one of the senators named to attend the remains to Cleveland. Mr. Sherman was also a member of the committee, and the train had hardly left the city limits when we fell into conversation about the dead president and discussed his career. Mr. Sherman spoke with intense feeling, and the impression left on my mind was that he heliaved that he had been betraved by the men chosen to advocate his nomination."

He was justified in regarding congregations made a large number of himself as a favorite of fortune and child of destiny. "I was in college with Garfield," continued Mr. Ingalls, though not in the same class, and our relations were cordial and friendly until his death. He was incapable of intrigue, treason or stratagem, but his temperament was emotional and ardent, and his sensibility was excessive. His mind was capacious and his nature generous and sincere. The fatal defeat in his character was an infimity of purpose that made him like clay in the hands of potter and disqualified him for administrative of executive functions."
