THE DALLES WEEKLY CHRONICLE, SATURDAY, MARCH 28, 1896.

impressively, "please put that paper "Why, nothing, of course-that is, nothing that I-that she-Hang it all, Ludlow, I believe I'm about to make a fool of myself!"

Ludlow stopped and gazed in openmouthed wonder at his friend. "Well, I'm blest if you don't break the record, Hugh! I thought it struck me pretty suddenly, but pshaw! my case wasn't a circumstance to this. I've heard of love at first sight, but this is the instantaneous photography kind. Why, you couldn't have got more than a glimpse of her as they passed us!"

"I-we-that is to say-I've seen her before," stammered Ringbrand.

"Oho! now I begin to understand; that's what brought you to Tregarthen. I thought Helen's prophetic soul didn't mislead her. Well, tell me the rest of it; I've got your fate in my hands, and you might as well make an ally of me at the start."

Ringbrand told his small story frankly, concluding with a plea for secrecy. "I'd rather you wouldn't tell even Mrs. Ludlow," he added. "It's such a piece of ridiculous absurdity in its present stage, you know."

"I'll promise not to tell her of my own accord," assented Ludlow, "but that isn't saying much. It's only fair to warn you that she'll get it out of me sooner or later. Best thing you can do is to get the affair into presentable shape as soon as possible; then you won't mind."

"Presentable shape!" groaned Ringbrand, "and I haven't even had an introduction! Ludlow, I believe I left my wits behind me when I came away from New York. I haven't been wholly accountable since I crossed the Ohio river."

"Oh, I don't know about that," rejoined Ludlow, reflectively. "You might have gone farther and fared a good deal worse; Hester Latimer's well worth any man's winning-only I'll tell you beforehand that she has all of her father's prejudices, magnified by the emotional nature of an impulsive young woman."

"What sort of prejudices?"

"Southern, mostly; pride of race and loyalty to section, with a lingering trace of bitterness as a result of the war. But there are compensating virtues that will warm the very cockles of your heart; such open-handed hospitality as you never dreamed of; a loyalty to kith and kin and friends that takes you right back to the days of chivalry; and another pleasant thing about them is that they reverse our social rule, and take a man for what he appears to be until he proves himself unworthy.'

down and tell me all about it. I want to know whom he's going to see.' Ludlow dropped the paper and looked up in ludicrous alarm. "Whom he's going to see?--what did I say just now?" "She repeated his answer word for word.

"Oh, Lord! I've let the cat out of the bag after all, and I promised him I wouldn't!" he exclaimed. "But then I told him you'd get it out of me. Pull Mrs. Ludlow listened eagerly while her husband recounted the meager facts of Ringbrand's sudden infatuation, the color coming and going in her cheeks and her eyes sparkling with the keenest appreciation. When he had finished, she clasped her hands over his knee and looked up at him in rapt ecstasy. "Oh, Tom! isn't that perfectly splendid? Just to think of it!-and after I've been shut up in this dead little village without a breath of excitement for four years. Of course, there'll be difficulties; they're just as different as they can be; and what would they do without some one to plan ior them?" Helen Ludlow had been the pretty girl of her set, and she had thrown away the chances of matrimonial preferment which come naturally to pretty wirls for the sake=of the struggling young mining engineer, whose first opening had condemned the young couple to social exile. There was a touch of pathos in her enthusiasm, and Ludlow answered it with an affectionate smile. "You are a born match-maker, Helen; it's a pity you couldn't have a wider field. But if I were you, I shouldn't interfere too much in the present case; they are not children, and the difficulties you apprehend will not be the common misunderstanding of a pair of foolish young lovers."

'What will they be, Tom?"

"They'll be much more serious, I imagine. You know Hester, perhaps better than I do; she is the incarnation of the southern ideal-impetuous, selfwilled, high-strung and impulsive, with a temperament that will be antagonistic at many points to the more thoughtful turn of mind of our story-writer. And as for Kingbrand, he must be greatly changed from the man I used to know at the university if he can't make himself believe that Hester Latimer embodies his ideal."

The wife's laugh had a ripple of de-

They walked along in silence for awhile, and then Ringbrand said: "I don't know but I overstated it a moment ago, after all. My first impulse when I saw Miss Latimer was merely a strong desire to study the type; it's unusual, and she is uncommonly beautiful. Just where the artistic sense merged into the erotic, I can't tell; I don't know enough of the symptoms to be able to diagnose my own case."

Ludlow laughed heartily: "That's a damaging admission for a story-writer. Why, you fellows are supposed to be able to analyze the tender passion in all its stages, from start to finish, and here you can't apply the first tests of your art to your own case! I shouldn't write any more love-tales, if I were you."

"I fancy it's another case of the sick doctor, Tom. You know a physician never trusts himself to treat his own malady."

Ringbrand was decidedly preoccupied at the supper table that evening, und Mrs. Ludlow did not fail to rally him unmercifully. So many of the sharp thrusts found the joints in his armor that he pleaded the need of exercise when they left the table, and went out for an evening stroll. When he was out of earshot, Mrs. Ludlow promptly attacked her husband.

brand this evening?" she inquired.

"Nothing that I know of," replied Ludlow, dropping into a veranda chair and burying himself, ostrich-like, in the newspaper.

"But I know there is," insisted the Jady. "He is distrait and embarrassed, buggy and nearly succeeded. His wife and he seems to be afraid I'll find out | threw him the lines, but he secured consomething. Where have you been today?"

"Nowhere, except down to the furnace."

Mrs. Ludlow rocked gently in her chair, watching the figure of Ringbrand appear and disappear in the windings of the road leading to the summit of the mountain. She was silent so and stunned, but luckily escaped serious long that her husband had time to relax his vigilance in the interest of the bruises about the face, but the boy was newspaper, and her next question caught him off his guard.

"What do you suppose he's going away up on the mountain for at this time of day?" she asked.

Ludlow heard the question with his outward ears and answered it mechanically: "I don't know; perhaps he's her.

There was another interval of silence, and then Mrs. Ludlow rose and stood " before her husband. "Tom," she said, | organized a combine.

your ponderous methods of logic to things you don't understand," she said. "The very things you call obstacles are the best reasons in the world why there should be no difficulties. Don't you see they are perfect opposites?"

"Perhaps you are right; but it doesn't look reasonable. And then, besides, there is the feud."

"I don't see how a foolish quarrel between the colonel and his neighbors can have anything to do with Hugh and Hester."

"I do. If Ringbrand marries into the family, he'll have to shoulder his share of the fight; and, as I remarked a moment ago, he'll have to be changed very much from the man I used to know if he consents to assume any such responsibilities."

Mrs. Ludlow laughed again. "You'll see," she said, "he'll do anything that's necessary." ....

A Runaway on the Deschutes.

Harvey Smith, the well-known sheepman of the Deschutes, had a thrilling adventure last week with a runaway team by which the lives of his wife and little boy were seriously endangered. "What is the matter with Mr. Ring- He had driven with them in a light toP buggy to the farm gate, and giving the lines to his wife, alighted to open th gate. Before he had returned to the buggy the horses became frightened and started to run. He tried to reach the trol of but one, and this he was forced to loose. The horses then ran for two miles over a very rough country, finally running down a steep and rocky hillside, where the buggy was capsized at the bottom by running into a ditch.

The lady and little boy were thrown out injury. Mrs. Smith sustained slight uninjured.

Neighbors followed the track made by the buggy and rendered the necessary assistance. The buggy was ruined and the horses badly injured.

That custom makes law is a truism that few will care to controvert, for it is often more binding than a legal enact-ment. Our citizens are accustomed to the location of chinatown, as they are of "Whitechapel," and bear with the exist-ing conditions, but they will not see its extension to other quarters of the city without a protest. A house is being constructed back of the depot which it is designed to use for a house of ill fame, thus endangering by contamination the social purity of another quarter of the city. The CHEONICLE enters a protest against this design and expects to be backed by the sentiment of the commu-nity. The system of fines at present in vogue, should be so enlarged in this in-stance that it will have a prohibitory ef-fect, confining the evil to its accustomed bounds.
