The river few feet above low water mark; the seaamount of surplus water must pass through the channel, and still the Mr. William Vanbibber Stopped in the weather is cold and the river low.

It is a conceded fact that another unusually high water will destroy the locks. This time there will be no one there to fight the destructive current. The men are gone and the Days have no longer even a passing interest in them. Such inroads were made in 1894 that the bank next the river would fall an easy prey to the erosive action of the water. It will tear away and destroy the bank, and finally working in behind the walls they will melt beneath the flood as if they were wax. The situation will then be worse than if the work was never begun, for there will be no foothold left to again construct them. Twenty-five years of effort, of the people's wasted money, of hopes and fears, of jobbery in high places, of dilatoriness, of false assertions and fictitious representations will have come to a logical end. Great is a government of the people by the people to the people.

SLEPT THIRTY-SIX DAYS.

Remarkable Experience of Lena Hanser of The Dalles.

Lena Hansen, who left The Dalles for the hospital in Portland several weeks ago, has just finished a remarkable sleep of thirty-six days. In that time she has become very pale and thin, and fears were entertained that she would die while in that comatose state. An Oregonian reporter has visited her, and ascertained many interesting facts.

The extraordinary feature about Miss Hansen's case is that she is not in a state of coma, a not uncommon condition, but that she is actually sleeping, just as any person sleeps who is reading this, only she does not awaken. And, during her thirty-six days' map she has so wasted away as to be little more than skin and bones.

old, a native of Denmark. For the last wonderful inventions, the kinetoscope, in two and a half years she has been living connection with the more familiar at The Dalles, and up to March 24th she phonograph. By this truly wonderful earned a livelihood by doing household discovery in science, t is possible for work for families of that vicinity.

March 25th Miss Hansan was brought of a speaker of today, but see him, mark to the Good Samaritan hospital. When his gestures and the expression of his Mrs. Wakeman, the superintendent of face. In this way the eloquence of the hospital, came into the receiving Henry Clay, the music of Ole Bull, the room she found Miss Hansen, accompanied by Miss Sophie Ebbersen, a all have been capable of reproduction by bright and attractive young countrywoman of her's, and Mrs. Wilson, of the city board of charities. Mrs. Wilson informed the superintendent that Miss Hansel needed hospital treatment, and, who can appreciate the gigantic strides as she had very little money, Secretary Walpole, of the city board of charities, wished to have her cared for during one week at the city's expense. Miss Ebberson, who had brought the girl down from The Dalles, then explained that Miss Hansen was suffering from a peculiar ailment, which affected her so that she was always falling asleep. This strange craving had come over her only in the last month, said Miss Ebbersen, during which time it had become almost impossible to keep her awake. The Dalles family in which she did housework managed to get her up sometimes at noon, but oftener not until afternoon. And yet she went to bed early in the evening. "Dr. Shackleford of The Dalles treated her for it. She, however, would not take his medicine, and so, after a short while, he said that she had better go to a hospital in Portland. That is how I came to bring her down." After working with her in various ways the Fortland doctors succeeded in awaking her, but she yet lies in a stupor with eyes wide open and seldom responds to a question.

From yesterday's Oregonian additional particulars are learned concerning Miss Hansen. She was moved Saturday morning in the hospital ambulance to the Portland hospital at Sunnyside. The cold water baths prescribed by Dr. Saylor, so far as he was able to note, have had a wonderful effect upon the girl, and yesterday morning she voluntarily talked and read a little, but in the afternoon she became quieter and finally went to sleep. From the beneficial results of the cold baths the physicians expressed hope of her speedy recovery from the peculiar ailment that produced such a remarkable slumber.

MAYS & CROWE.

Read by a Would-be Robber.

Mr. William Vanbibber, who has driven a milk wagon for about thirty years, from his ranch to The Dalles, was held up about 1:30 o'clock Sunday mornidg while on his way in. He was ordered to stop, and Mr. Vanbibber did o, not realizing it was a command, and thinking it was some friend of his. He was undeceived when he was ordered to throw up his hands, and he refused to do it, though a pistol was thrust at him, pointing toward his leg. The order was repeated, and this time was accompanied by a blow with the pistol across the fleshy part of the leg. Mr. Vanbibber has for the past few months carried a weapon, but he did not have it on this trip. He, however, expressed defiance, and whipping his horse, started briskly off. After he had gone about 20 feet, a pistol shot was fired, and the horse crouched down as if shot. He was probably "creased," that is the ball passed so closely to his head, that the effect is temporarily the same as if shot. He recovered and started again, when another shot was fired with the same effect. Four or five shots were fired, bringing the horse to a stand each time until the last, when he went ahead.

Mr. Vanbibber said he did not get a view of the face of the hold-up, but was confident of the voice, and later swore out a warrant for the arrest of a well known young man, whose name we are requested not to mention until the result of the preliminary trial, so that in case the defendant is discharged the publicity may be no greater than possible.

A preliminary trial was held this afternoon, at which Mr. Vanbibber swore to the identity of the pistol and the voice of his assailant.
