"The Stove Shark."

From The Rural New Yorker, May 16, 1896:

I am glad that the R. N.-Y. is going to give "the Stove Shark" some free advertising. This Western firm has been operating in Ohio for six or eight years, selling a steel or wrought-iron range for $69, to many who preferred to pay for the ranges that had been set up in their kitchens rather than wrangle with the agent. The contract is peculiarly worded. In fine print, it states that the company shall not be held liable for representations made by the agent. The latter is usually a very voluble young man, gifted with a wonderful flow of conversation, and an assurance that is simply sublime. Temporary headquarters are usually established at some town convenient of access to two or three counties, and from this point the territory is worked by several agents who are employed by the month, and are sent out in wagons with the ranges. The agents are expected to place the ranges in the kitchens of the farmers under some pretense, and then to secure a note that binds the business.

Last summer I suffered two inflictions of these agents, the second one driving his mules up my private driveway as though he owned the place, and ordinary courtesy and a firm refusal had no more visible effect upon him than it would have had upon his mules. The first agent had failed, and he had been sent to get the range into the kitchen. After an hour or courteous treatment of the stranger, I changed my tactics and offered him the alternative of getting his mule team off my place in two minutes, or taking a sound thrashing. He chose the former, much to my relief, as he was a very able-bodied man. While at a Columbus, Ohio, hotel a few months afterward a young man was given a seat at my table in the dining room. Some inquiry by him led to conversation, and I learned that he was an employee of this western range company. That interested me, and he was encouraged to talk. Among other things he said: "There is plenty of hard work in this business. I go to men who have no more idea of buying one of our $69 range than of buying a steamboat, and sell to them before I leave. I can get $20 more for one of our ranges than a regular hardware dealer can get." If the range company is inclined to dispute the authenticity of this incident, I can, at least, furnish it with the name of the agent, as I took the precaution to get it from the hotel register. The fact is that the methods of this concern cannot stand the R. N.-Y.'s searchlight, and it should be turned on for the benefit of the public. ALVA AGEK.

The Fruit Crop.

The weekly crop bulletin has the following:

On high and sheltered ground about Mosier prunes avoided the frost, but on low ground many orchards are a failure. In the Hood River valley prunes appear to be setting well, and will yet make a crop. Apple trees are in full bloom. Strawberries are ripening, and shipments have been made from The Dalles. Pears and cherries are bearing well, and other fruits, except peaches and apricots, are not hurt to a great extent, and are expected to make good crops. In Union county and to the south, where fruit trees were late blooming, generally, the crop prospects are not impaired.
