A QUESTION of COURAGE

It was Mrs. Ludlow's turn to be astonished, and she gave a little gasp of surprise. "Do you mean that you didn't send him away last night, after all?"

Hester's embarrassment was pitiful, but she made a brave effort at frankness. "Not in the way that you mean; I—I couldn't, very well, when he didn't give me the chance."

There were tears in her eyes, and Mrs. Ludlow crossed over to the sofa and put her arms around her. "Tell me about it, dear," she said, stroking the bowed head tenderly.

"There isn't anything to tell," sobbed the girl; "he's just been good and kind and gentle-as he is to ev-everybody; and last night he told me good-by as if I'd been the m-merest acquaintance." "Told you good-by? Did he say he was going away?" "No; father and Henry came up just then, and he didn't get a chance to say anything else."

'I think he menat to, Hester, dear." "I-I almost know he did; he said he wanted to tell me something about himself; and then he said it was of no conse-

Mrs. Ludlow thought hard for a moment and then asked: "Wasn't there the least little bit of a quarrel about something, dear?"

Hester sat up and shook her head vehemently. "Indeed, there wasn'tnot the smallest word. We had been talking about the feud, and from that we drifted into an argument about courage; I remember we didn't quite agree, but there wasn't anything like a quarrel."

Mrs. Ludlow's mind reverted instantly to what her husband had said about the feud being a possible obstacle to Ringbrand's love-making, and before replying to Hester she made a mental note pointing to further inquiries. "Then, if you haven't quarreled, it's all right, dear," she said, soothingly; "he'll come back; and I happen to know that he doesn't regard you as a mere acquaintanze-not by a great deal. But what in the world do you suppose has become of him?"

"I can't imagine, only I'm just weighed down by a dreadful fear that something awful has happened. I know it's foolish, but I can't help it."

"Have you said anything to your father about it?" "Not yet, but I'm going back right now to ask him to go to Squire Craven's; his is the first house beyond ours, you know. Then I'll get Henry to ride down to Dunbar to ask there.' "That's sensible. If you'll do that,

Ill stir Tom up when he comes to dinner, and if we can't find out anything to-day, we'll just make them get up a search party to-morrow."

When Hester had ridden away on her errand, Mrs. Ludlow began to watch for the home coming of her husband, and that much-tired individual saw the light of inquiry in her eyes before she had said a word upon the subject of Ringbrand's disappearance. While Ludlow was quite sure that he held the key to the mystery, he could not rid himself of a certain indefinite responsibility for his friend's safety. During the preceding day he had found comfort in the belief that he would soon get a telegram from the missing man. directing the disposition of his effects, and when the second morning did not bring this he had quietly telegraphed to Dunbar and McNairville to ascertain if Ringbrand had taken the train at either of these places. The negative answers came promptly, and on his way home from the furnace Ludlow met the down train for the purpose of asking the same question of the conductor. The man remembered Ringbrand perfectly, and was quite sure that he had not had him as a passenger since the day when he had ridden to Tregarthen on a fare paid to Kingville. In view of these unsuccessful investigations, Ludlow's well-simulated indifference to his wife's anxiety was worthy of all

"Don't you worry about Hugh," he said; "he'll turn up all right when he gets good and ready. I suppose he and Hester had some little tiff and he's gone off to sulk."

"It isn't anything of the kind," she insisted. "Hester's been here this morning, and she told me all about it. They parted good friends, and she's sure something dreadful has happened to him. Don't you know any of his friends in New York to whom you could telegraph?"

"No; and if Idid, they wouldn't know. He hasn't had time to get to New York, unless he went in a balloon."

"I don't care, I think it's perfectly heartless of you to be so indifferent about him; one would think you'd enre a little bit about what became of him." Ludlow put his arm around her and lifted her face so that he could look into her eyes. "Perhaps I'm not so indifferent, after all," he said. "Tell me what you wish me to do, and I'll go do it, if I have to let the furnace freeze while the men turn out to hunt for "That is what ought to be done-tomorrow, anyway. Hester's gone to ask her father to ride along the mountain to see if anyone has heard of him, and Henry will go to Dunbar. If they can't find out anything, I think you ought to get up a search party. Now, Tom, there's one thing more. Tell me why you thought Hugh wouldn't have anything to do with the feud if he knew Ludlow saw he was upon the brink, and braced himself for the plunge, but he evasively asked: "When did I say anything like that?"

"Why, you remember-the first time we were talking about him and Hester; you said he'd have to be very much changed from the man you used to know if he consented to assume any such responsibilities."

"Did I say that?" "Of course you did; and I want to know what it meant, and all about it."

"Why, I didn't mean anything in particular, except that Hugh was always a peaceable fellow-a man who avoids rows as a cat picks her way around a pool of water."

"There's more than that to it, Tom, dear, and you might just as well tell me | Je first as last. Hasn't be been talking to you about this-this idiosyncrasy of Ludlow dropped into his chair with a groan. "I knew just how it would be," he said; and then he told her what he could remember of the conversation in which Ringbrand had confessed his inability to face danger and the bearing this would have upon his relations with Hester and her family. "He said he was going to try to fight it out with Ja himself, and that if he failed we needn't be surprised if he turned up missing, because he wouldn't have the face to say good-by. Now you know the whole of it, and why I haven't been borrowing any trouble about his disappearance. I concluded at once that he'd made a miss-go of his fight and had decided that discretion was the better part of

Mrs. Ludlow pursed up her lips and walked airily around to her place at the dinner-table. "Tom," she said, smiling serenely across the table at him, "I'm positively ashamed of you. Do you suppose for a moment that Hugh would have stayed here all this time making love to Hester when he knew all along that he wasn't going to have the courage to stand up for her when he got pesterous things, and 1 don't know which is the more ridiculous-his absuridity in telling you, or yours in believing him."

Ludlow fell back in his chair in an attitude of helpless despair. "Helen, my dear, you'd make an angel weep; you would, indeed! What have I to do with it? How am I responsible for it? Who made me the godfather to this chnekled-headed infant?"

"Please don't be tragie, Tom," she eaid, sweetly. "It doesn't become you. You know you aided and abetted him in this toolish notion, and then to think that you'd sit down calmly in the belief that he'd run away without saying a word! It's too perfectly abourd for anything! What you should do is to Van Dugan, Adams & Co., nails telegraph everybody you can think of right away, and if you don't hear anything by to-morrow morning you ought to take the men and search every foot of the mountain till you find him."

For reply he handed her the two messages from McNairville and Dunbar, adding that he had questioned the conductor on his way home. "Then you haven't been quite as hard-hearted as I thought you were. Can't you think of anyone else to tele-

"Have you suspected the Bynums of having anything to do with it?" "I'd suspect them quickly enough if there were the slightest grounds for a motive; but there isn't a shadow of reason for thinking that they'd make war on Hugh."

"Perhaps not; only I thought they might have identified him in some way with the Latimers."

Ludlow scouted the idea; and during he afternoon he instructed the mine bosses to have their men gather at The Laurels" early the following morning, prepared to make a thorough search for the missing man.

After supper the colonel's man came lown with a note from Hester. Nothing had been heard of Ringbrand, either at the Cravens' house or in Dunbar, and the writer asked if the search party had been arranged for the next lay, adding that the colonel and Henry wished to join it. Ludlow sent sack word that he would be at "The Laurels" at an early hour in the mornng with as many men as he could gather, and Mrs. Ludlow wrote a postscript to his note, asking Hester to spend the day with her.

THE SILVER CONVENTION.

Appears to Be No Opposition to Bry an's Endorsement.

Sr. Louis, July 23 .- The silver convention was called to order at 10:32 a. m. Chas. Towne of Minnesota was called on to address the convention. 10 00 Towne was interrupted by frequent cheering. At the mention of Bryan's name there was a big demonstration. He said Bryan represents the cause of humanity against injustice.

Ex-Governor St. John of Kansss was called on and responded. His allusion to Cleveland was greeted with laughter by the delegates.

At the conclusion of St. John's speech the committees on organization, rules and platform were appointed, after which Mrs. Helen Gougar of Indiana addressed the convention. Mrs. Gougar touched on prohibition and Hon. E. R. Cole of Wisconsin took issue with her, defending the brewing interests of Milwankee and St. Louis.

When Cole had concluded the convention took a recess until 2:30 p. m.

Will Oppose Any Compromise.

Sr. Louis, July 23 .- Middle-of-theroad men held a meeting just before the hour for the afternoon session of the convention. The net result was the adoption of a motion declaring it the sense of the middle-of-the-road men that no compromise should be entertained or adopted by them.

A Victory for the Bryan Men.

Sr. Louis, July 23.-General Weaver has been elected chairman of the committee on platform. This is considered a victory for the Bryan men.

NOT A SICK DAY For Over Thirty Years! RESULT OF USING AYER'S PILLS

"Ayer's Cathartic Pills for over thirt, years have kept me in good health, never having had a sick day is all that time. Before I was twenty I suffered almost continually-as a result of constipation—from dyspepsia, headaches, neuralgia, or boils and other cruptive diseases. When I became convinced that nine-tenths of my troubles were caused by constipation, I began the use of Ayer's Pills, with the most satisfactory results, never having a single attack that did not readily yield to this remedy. My wife, who had been an invalid for years, also began to use Ayer's Pills, and her health was quickly restored. With my children I had noticed that nearly all their allments were preceded by constipation, and I soon had the pleasure of knowing that with children as with parents, Ayer's Pills, If taken in season, avert all danger of sickness."-H.
