The McKinley Zouaves.

The McKinley club of zonaves was organized last night at the city council

Mr. Hayward Riddell was chosen temporary chairman and Dave Lemerson temporary secretary, and later the organization was made permanent. The president stated the object of the meeting, and in response to a request for furtumes and sixty cape uniforms.

Mr. F. W. Wilson moved that a civil and military organization be perfected; that the civil part consist of a president, vice-president, secretary and treasurer; that the military part consist of a captain and first and second lieutenant: past week. and that an election of these officers be made at once. The motion carried, resulting as follows: Hayward Riddell president, L. S. Fritz vice president, Dave Lemerson secretary and treasurer. These were by acclamation. The military officers were chosen by ballot, Levi Chrisman being the unanimous choice for captain, and J. R. McAvoy and A. B. Kerns receiving an equal number of votes. On motion of Kerns, McAvoy was chosen first lieutenant.

Captain Chrisman then made a brief speech, in which he said the time was so short the club must get to work and drill Mrs. Leslie Butler's, on any Thursday at once and it was important for every member to be present. Prices Rising, Business Improving and Business is improving. Whether it is because of the assurance that McKinley will be elected, or whatever the cause, that mysterious factor called public confidence is surely returning.

Wheat is now worth 45 cents in Portland and is rising. The warehouses are of, including one initiation, the order paying 49 cents for first grade, and the Diamond Flouring Mills 52 for best quality Klickitat. About four carloads of wheat per day is leaving The Dalles. There is a disposition on the part of some farmers to hold it, in anticipation of a further rise.

The wool market, also, is not stationary by any means, though most of what is leaving now is upon consignment. About 4,000,000 pounds of this year's clip has left the city already. Last week's shipment amounted to half a million pounds. About 100 carloads have already gone to Boston, and all the large furniture cars which arrive in The Dalles are sidetracked in the yards to receive further shipments. The price of wool has not materially improved of late, but an indication of the feeling may be learned by the fact that a buyer recently offered to contract a grower's crop for 1016 cents in case McKinley was elected.

The increase of railroad business in the carrying trade is denoted by the increase in the number of trains, two extra crews having been added in the

"A Bowery Girl."

A large audience greeted "A Bowery Girl" last evening at the New Vogt, larger than the merits of the production warranted. Theater-goers were generally disappointed and there was a manifest lack of applause, which could not be stirred at the last by the one redeeming feature of the whole play, the fire scene, at the close of the last act. "A Bowery Girl" does not come up to its pretensions and the fine quality of its advertising paper. Its tragedy is weak and its comedy insipid. The specialty songs and dances are fair in their way, but are nothing above mediocre. "A Bowery Girl" assumes to be a melodrama, but the plot is hysterical and the situations impossible. The heroics of the star in the title role are so plainly for stage purposes that the attempted counterfeit of real life betrays itself too plainly. The heroine, a girl stripling of 16 years, who foils the heavy villain by her physical prowess in a parior full of people, is always behind a table or a box to listen to his plans, and in the last act, after fair warning, falls a victim to his stiletto with faint resistance, has too much of the essence of the dime novel to suit an intelligent audience. There are redeeming features of the production, but they are apart from the plot and the actors. They consist in the properties. The special scenery is perhaps the finest ever shown in the city. The palisades on the Hudson, the bowery in New York City, and the scene of the roof tops of the city, the latter culminating in the finest fire scene the writer ever witnessed, are worthy of generous praise.
