KITE PHOTOGRAPHY.

Recent Experiments in Boston by an Expert Operator.

Possibilities of the Method in War Time for Armies and Navies-High Buildings Would Not Be Necessary for Observations.

William A. Eddy writes of his recent experiments in Boston: "The use of kite photography for the army and navy is yet in a pioneer state, and many improvements remain to be made in the apparatus with which I took the first kite mid-air photograph of Boston on August 25, 1896, at 10:40 a. m. The wind on Monday had been too high to enable me to raise my camera to a sufficient height to enable me to expose the film. There is nothing a kite seems to resent so much as the addition of a weight to the line running up to it. In order to lift a camera weighing three pounds to a height of 1,000 feet a strong uplifting pull of 20 or 30 pounds must be exerted. If the wind is light, as many as eight kites, each one seven feet in diameter, must be employed, but if the wind is strong, say 20 miles an hour, the same work may be better done by means of the upward pull of five kites of the same size.

"The obstacles to be overcome in midair photography are formidable, especially when the kites are sent up from grass plot or from ground covered by bushes. The sudden decline of the kites, due to a falling off in the wind, may drop the camera-snapping line to the ground, where it may become entangled in weeds. In flying kites high buildings, like the new Tremont building in Roston, where my recent experiments were carried out, the chief difficulty to overcome was the updraft and whirling air currents which pertain to all high buildings, especially at noon, when the sun shining upon vartical walls gives rise to strong vertical currents. Another difficulty to be obviated in regard to kite photography from tandem kite catching in an overhanging cornice when the wind is light and a line of six or seven kites is steadily falling, owing to want of wind. The inside kite by becoming stalled at the cornice may make it impossible to draw in the declining kites, causing the whole Ine to go down over tree tops, chimneys and roofs.

"There are many great improvements to be made in kite photography, the principal one of which is the exposure of a film which is very wide and which would include more of the horizon line. At the same time the camera shutter will be opened and closed by electricity, which will also turn a new film into hauling down of the camera at the completion of each exposure. So uncertain is the wind that any device which will PARROT WAS GOOD COMPANY. save time must greatly facilitate the

"The value of kite photography in the army is beyond question, because it costs far less than that of balloons, and because the cameras can be kept above the very bird. You are married, are you a local point in strong winds, which would press a balloon downward and force the gas out of it, destroying its Chicago Tribune. buoyancy. Encampments can be seen beyond very high hills. The photographs taken at a height of several hundred feet above Blue Hill observatory reveal a valley and horizon line beyond an adjacent high hill of the range. The smoke of camp fires, the dust of wagon trains, would certainly reveal the approach of an army. In the navy the rapid motion of a man-of-war would keep the camera in the air during a dead calm, while by the use of a steam launch a camera in mid-air supported by kites could be towed toward shere in shallow water where a man-of-war could not enter. I propose to make further experiments to enable me to point my camera nearly in the direction from which the sun is shining. I think this can be done by excluding part of the sun's rays by means of a projecting roof to the lens, and with the size of thin colored glass.

"Should this succeed, then eight cameras, back to back, in the form of an octagon, could be snapped at once, revealing the smoke pennant of an enemy's vessel 40 miles away, should the octagon camera be raised to a height of 900 feet. Such a camera could be readily lifted in a dead calm at sea by means of eight kites, 20 feet in diameter, should the man-of-war move at the rate of 15 miles an hour.

"We all like to look out from mountains, and nearly all the aeronauts have mentioned their exhilaration at the vast hollow bowl-like earth below them, with its horizon line forming a ring level with the eye. All our high buildings are sought for purposes of such observations. In the level landscape, often extending hundreds of miles in the central west, such vistas, taken with the aid of the kite-air camera, must be always interesting to many people. According to the weather bureau records. August is usually the mildest month of the year. In photographing Boston with my kite camera I have been delayed several days by unfavorable conditions which prevented me from taking as many photographs of important historic parts of the city as I would like to have taken. I am indebted to J. W. Smith, of the weather bureau, to C. W. Clark, to H. A. Horton and to countless others for friendly help in many difficult emergencies."-Springfield (Mass.) Republican.

PUT FISH IN HIS MILK. Ornel Treatment of Honest "Paddy"

O'Hara by Two City Jokers. "Paddy" O'Hara, butcher and milkman of La Conner, with his fountains of mirth and beaming face, is in the city again taking in the sights, says The Dalles, Portland and Astoria the Seattle Times, "Paddy" is a character, an original fellow, and is known to everyone in Skagit county, also to most all of the old-timers of Scattle. He likes to tell stories, but here is one that another fellow told on him:

The duties of milkman in La Conner are in a large measure regarded as those of a public servant, and if the milkman is ever suspected of watering his milk a public scandal is the result. O'Harn was continually annoyed by ome of his customers in their bantering way accusing him of selling watered milk. One of them declared he broadly need to be all the selling water the selli would prove the milk was watered, and wager was quickly closed with two of the most noted "joshers" in the community. The next morning "Paddy" was more careful than ever, and gave his customers almost pure cream. His content was short-lived, however, for in the presence of his best lady customer, as he poured out the rich fluid, what should glide out of the can into the measure but three small Puget sound silverside salmon. O'Hara was greatly excited and his customer equally alarmed. He declared loud and long that he had been "jobbed," and, to subtantiate the assertion, he even said hat if he did water his milk a little he was not guilty of putting in the fish, as that would only too plainly display eriminal carelessness.

STEPPED IT OFF.

Peculiar Shape of the Land Caused by the Measuring Process.

It is a commonly-recepted theory that man steps three feet, and many a tract of land has been "stepped off" instead of measured with a chain, says the Washington Star. In the west they obviate the difficulties of surveys by the land being divided into sections, but in Pennsylvania much of the property, es necially in the mountains, must still be described by metes and bounds.

In one of the counties in western Pennsylvania are two brothers, one of whom is tall and lank and the other buildings arises from a lower short and fat. Many years ago they purchased a tract of mountain land calling for a mile square. They divided the labor of measuring it, one stepping off one side, the other the other side. Then they fenced it in and were perfectly satisfied until recently, when suit was brought to recover a considerable tract of land. Each brother swore that he knew the measurement to be right and told how it had been done. Then, as the spectators saw the short legs of the one, arcely long enough to reach the floor when he sat in a chair, and the clongated extremities of the other, there was a general laugh, in which the judge and attorney joined. Upon surveying it was found that one line was a mile and a place. This would do away with the half long and the other only a little over

He Was Recommended to a Lonesome

Married Woman. "Yes'm," said the dealer in captive birds and animals, "you want a parrot not?

His fair customer bowed, says the

"And your husband is away? thought so. And you want the parrot to keep you from feeling lonesome? Yes? This is the very bird."

"Is it a fluent talker?" asked the prospective purchaser.

The dealer hesitated. "Well, no'm," he said, at last. "You vouldn't hardly call him a fluent talker; no, not that. But for what you want, he's the best I have." "What can the bird say?"

"That's what makes him the right one, ma'm. He ain't got but one remark, to tell the truth; but he's been brought up for just what you want. Every morning he makes a sound like a bureau drawer opening, and says, cross-like:

"'Where the deuce have you hidden my clean collars this time?'"

Make Nuisances of Themselves.

There are some persons who are never satisfied unless making a noise. For them the bicycle is too silent a steed, and they have been endeavoring to find some method of racket-making while riding. The latest for the noiseloving rider is the big gong attached to the rear wheel, which clangs like a street car gong and makes timid persons fear that they are about to be run down by a trolley car. This is only one form of nuisance. The other is a rubber band attachment to the frame of the wheel. The rubber bands are used for the reason that when the wind is blowing and the rider is pedaling in its direction the bands set up a humming sound that is really hideous. Several runaways have been caused by the buzzing of the rubber.

Copper in the Tissues.

For several years past the working chemists have claimed that native copper may be found in minute quantities in the tissues of every known species of plant and animal. Since January 1 a commission appointed by the British Association for the Advancement of Science has made 60,000 examinations and chemical analysis by a great variety of processes and has not failed to find traces of copper in a single in-stance. They found it in the coloring of flowers, in the feathers, beaks and eyes of birds, in the human brain and blood, in the blades, grains and roots of wheat, in the scales of fishes and serpents, in short everywhere.
