A GREAT INLAND CITY.

Professor Gilbert Tells of Its Growth and Appearance.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., April 12, 1897.

EDITOR CHRONICLE:—I am much interested in Indianapolis as it is today the largest inland city on the American continent, and one of the most important railroad centers in this country. I was here once before in 1881, and note that its great growth has been practically one of two decades. It is certainly a handsome city, with its magnificent business blocks, public buildings, and handsome residences. The area within the city limits was about twenty square miles, but since the including of the suburbs a few days ago it must be vastly increased. About 1870 the citizens began to have aspirations toward making the city a great commercial and manufacturing center, not unlike Los Angeles, Portland or Seattle. An era of speculation seized upon the people, discretion fled to the woods—the dog got its tail pinched. The rapid growth of population I take from "Indianapolis Handbook," which shows for 1870, 36,565; in 1880, 75,074; in 1890, 128,000; and today the claim is 210,000. This last I cannot give on authority, yet Greater Indianapolis is now realized since the accession of West Indianapolis, Haughville, North Indianapolis Irvington and Brightwood.

Of course the surroundings of the city are not so picturesque as our western cities, with their mountains, rivers, lake, sounds and the ocean. The streets of the city are in first-class condition. Forty-five miles are paved with asphaltum, brick or cedar blocks, and the rest is graveled. Over fifty miles of sewer constructed within the last five years, cost over $4,000,000. Besides using gas for lighting the streets, there are over 850 electric lights.

I learn that the water supply for the city comes from deep wells near here, is pumped through large irom mains, and supplied to consumers by direct pressure from the pump house. It is abundant, clear and pure.

By letter yesterday I learn that Maude is visiting in Ft. Wayne and Defiance, O.; Clarence is in Danville, Ill., and Mrs. Gilbert at Andrews.

A few days ago I stepped up to the stamp window ot the postoffice and, laying down a quarter, said: "Two bits worth of stampe, please." "How many?" said Uncle Sam's man. I repeated. He gave me the cold, glassy stare. We eyed each other for a moment, and neither spoke. Then I said: "Twelve two-cent stamps and a card, please." It did not occur to me till after I was out on the walk what was the matter with the fellow.

FORGOT HIS NECKTIE.

Embarrassing Situation of a Young Man Out West.

In these days of cheap neckwear a man is poor indeed who cannot afford a large collection of ties. There is one young man in this city, however, says the Denver Times, who would have willingly paid five times the cost of a cravat, if necessary, a few days ago. He is a genius in his way, and, like most of his tribe, requires a guardian. It was on a bright, warm morning, not long since, that he sauntered from his home, just about shopping time, and in his absent-minded way wandered downtown. As he walked along Sixteenth street people gazed at him curiously, and some were ill-bred enough to laugh. Their curiosity was lost upon him, however, for he was far away in reveries of the bright, happy times when editors accept everything that is offered without even asking ambitious young authors to ruthlessly cut manuscript "to satisfy our readers." He wandered into a crowded drug store, and, elbowing his way through the throngs of well-dressed women, asked for his favorite phosphate, and then continued his stroll until he reached the office of the Times. Then some one asked him why he did not dress before coming on the street. He looked up in mild amazement, sought a mirror, and then made a rush for the nearest haberdashery. Since then he has become possessor of a complete collection of ties, and when he sees his sister wearing the choicest specimens, his hand invariably seeks his collar band to see if he has again been neglectful.

Astronomical Discoveries.

That the best attainments are not the result of chance was exemplified in the discovery of the planet Neptune, the fiftieth anniversary of which event was recently celebrated in France. Telescopes had long swept the sky without discovering this shy outer planet; but when astronomers noticed how Uranus hastened in one part of its orbit and moved with less rapidiay in another, they knew there must be an attracting body that held him in check. Leverrier, therefore, after minute calculations, wrote to the astronomer of the Berlin observatory, requesting him to point his telescope to a particular spot in the sky on an evening indicated, and said: "You will see a planet which I have not seen, and which no human eye has ever seen, but which nevertheless must be on the spot." No one would venture to call its discovery that night an act of chance.—Youth's Companion.

Facts About Eclipses.

The maximum number of eclipses that can take place within a period of a year is seven, and of these five are solar and two are lunar, and the minimum number of eclipses is two, which must both be solar. The year 1897, the second of the last semidecade of the Nineteenth century, will present this minimum number of eclipses, which, of necessity, must be solar and central, and will be annular. The first takes place on February 1, and the second on July 29. Both will be visible to some extent in this country.—Albany Journal.
