Chronicle and Examiner ...

ERRORS IN HISTORY.

Chronicle and Tribune.....

There is a great deal of rhetorical fustian in newspaper editorials on the present war between Greece and in its disparaging comments on the valor of the modern Greeks, should adhere to facts, and not follow school "histories" in exploiting its knowledge of the famous actions of antiquity. Some of its statements are on a par with the one it recently made that in French history "Waterloo is sometimes called the battle of Quatre Bras." The Statesmen asked for its authority, but no response has vet been made.

In its paragraph on the war now raging, the aforesaid daily slashes right and left with perfect recklessness, quoting from compilations of ancient history, instead of going to the fountain head for its facts. It says Xerxes led 1,000,000 Persians into Greece in the third invasion (pray, what was the first invasion?) when the Father of History declares positively that there were 2,641,610 fighting men, 300,000 of whom were Greeks in the service of Persia, besides as many more non combatants, making a grand total of 5,283,220 men that Xerxes, son of Darius, led to Thermopylae, exclusive of women who made bread, and concubines, and other attendants, besides beasts of burden and Indian dogs, which no one could number.

The big daily also speaks of Leon idas' "deathless 300." Had the editor referred more carefully to his school history he would have found the statement that the 300 all died, including Leonidas himself. That is also the opinion generally received -they all died, and were not "leathless.' The fact, however, is that only 298 of the 300 actually fell in the battle, as anyone will find by consulting the only original authority. Furthermore, they were not buried on Mount Olympus, but were entombed in the pass, near the hot gates, where they fell.

There is another glaring fiction of history which the Oregonian editor unwittingly adopts, in common with the great mass of loose writers and declaimers. The battle of Thermopylae is never referred to without the particular statement that there Leonidas and his 300 Spartans died gloriously while defending the liberties of Greece against the Persian millions, the inference being that no other Greeks fought and died there. The truth is, Herodotus, the only contemporary authority, expressly declares that after Leonidas had dismissed all the Grecian troops except his own, knowing defeat was certain, and that he and the Spartans could not honorably desert the post, 700 Thespians and 400 Thebans, from two small cities of Bocotia, stayed with him. The Thespians remained willingly, for they refused to go away and abandon Leonidas and those with him, but remained and died with them; but the Thebabs were compelled to stay, as Leonidas distrusted them, and ofter he was Thermopylae under Leonidas, a fair trade. deduction from the words of Herodo-Statesman.

The teachers' examination, taking place today, naturally suggests the subject of the system under which these examinations are made. At 2 25 the last quarterly examination twothirds of the applicants failed to pass, Chronicle and N. Y. World...... 2 00 the examination being a very difficuit one. The club of Hercules has wedding. rotted; the sword of Thesseus rusted to decay; Ajax and Ajax Telamon sleep side by side; Ulysses, the wise, Jason, the bold, exist only in tradition; Achilles no longer vulnerable in the heel, dies ignobly from England's Hector-thrust at his pockets. It is heroic soil; but heroes no longer exist since the battle against the invincible and invisible power of the money king is hopeless.

It seems not so long ago when Richard of the lion heart, gathered his sturdy following of gallant knights and swept down upon the hosts of Islam. The cross and the crescent met, and Jerusalem was taken from the Turk. Those were different days. The Turk was not England's property then; he is now. > It is astonishing how prone some people are to reason in a circle and arrive at conclusions satisfactoryto themselves-on almost any given proposition. We note an editorial going the rounds showing that this country is soon to have an immense gold surplus because we are every year taking such vast sums of it out of the ground. Therefore, says the philosopher who wrote the editorial, as we cannot eat it or consume it, we must soon accumulate a vast store of time to save the life of the patient, and it. NO DANGER IN GRAPE SEEDS. Much Drended Apendicitis Not to Be

Caused by Them There is a popular and false notion that apendicitis is caused by a grape seed, an orange seed or some other foreign substance getting into the vermiform appendix. The true cause is the setting up of inflammation and conscquent gangrene in the tissue of the appendix, usually due to insufficient circulation of blood in the part itself. In thousands of operations which have taken place-many in many too late-there is not one authentiented ense of a foreign substance, such as a seed, being found in the appendix. This will be more fully realized when one has in mind that the interior of the appendix is only big enough to admit a medium-sized darning needle. Its to its low order of vital resistance. That is, it is an organ which appears to have no actual use in the present machinery of man, but in its earlier stages of man's development it is believed to have been a large pouch that played an important part in the digestive operations of the human system. By ages of disuse it has gradually shrunk to its present dimensions, and is known to science as a vestigial organ, one which is only a remnant of its former self, and pos sessing but a vestige of its original
