From the Sucker State.

LAFOX, Ill., May 11, 1897.

EDITOR CHRONICLE:
I thought I would drop you a line, as I have lots of time here at LaFox, and it may be of some interest to some of my friends.

I left Columbus, Nebraska, where I had been feeding sheep about three weeks ago and brought them down here to be shorn with the shearing machine or clippers. There has been over 30,000 sheep shorn here with this machine this spring and to the satisfaction of everybody. Although they can't shear more sheep with the clippers than by hand, there is one big advantage. They won't cut the sheep up so badly as with the shears and we get more wool of the sheep. I think the clippers will be used out West in a few years instead of shears, provided our present administration is friendly to the sheep industry, as they had promised before the election. If not, then it won't pay to shear the sheep any more, with wool at 5 or 6 cts per pound, either by hand or by clippers. Well, I expect to get through feeding here soon and will market my sheep just as soon as the market gets better, as it has been very dull for the past three weeks, and then I will come out to Oregon again to breathe some mountain air for a few months. I hear that some of the Eastern sheep buyers got wild on Oregon sheep this spring and paid rather stiff prices for some. Well, there was quite a little money made all through the country among the sheep and cattle feeders this season, but the prospects are that some of them will lose it again next winter. The way they paid for sheep and the big amount of sheep which are going to be fed next winter again, will surely keep the prices down. I remain yours truly,
OTTO KOHLER.

High Water in Klamath County.

Lost river slough, in Klamath county, is bank high again with overflow water from the Klamath, and has increased the normal volume of water in Lost river more than double, and in consequence Tule lake is overflowing much of the farm and hay lands of Tule lake valley. R. Hutchison has found it necessary to lay planks in order to be able to get about his premises. The old farm residence of Mike Hartery is surrounded by water, which, up to a few years ago, always remained high and dry. Back water from the lake in Lost river extends as far as Merrill. The natural bridge near the mouth of Lost river, on which emigrants used to cross at all seasons of the year, is more than ten feet under water.

A Bloodhound's Keen Scent.
A remarkable exhibition of the keenness of scent of the bloodhound was given at the little town of Bronson, in Allen county, the other day. The town recently appropriated $100 out of the city treasury for the purchase of one of these animals, the purpose being the detection and capture of thieves who were operating in the neighborhood, and a test of the hound was considered desirable. At noon three men started out on foot and walked four miles into the country. Then they mounted horses and by a circuitous route returned to the town. Six hours later the hound was permitted to smell a glove which had been worn by one of the men, and the next instant with a deep howl he caught up the trail and followed it on the run. At one point the men had walked for 30 yards on a fence, and when the hound came to this point he carried his nose along the rail with hardly any reduction of speed. Coming to the place where the men had mounted, he took up the trail of the horses and followed it into town, where, in a crowd of more than 100 men, he picked out the one whose glove had been given him to smell.—Kansas City Journal.

A Conservative Opinion.
The young man had not been given a part on the stage, but at a point in the performance where a song was desired he was permitted to stand in the wings and sing.

"What did they think of me as a singer?" he anxiously asked of a friend.

"Did you hear any comments?"

"Why-er-yes. They said you were out of sight."—Washington Star.

A Cheerful Prospect.
"I did not expect you would shed tears because I'm going to take your daughter away," said the bridegroom elect.

"It is for you that I'm weeping, young man," said the old gentleman, as he carelessly thumbed the stubs of his check book.—Detroit Free Press.

Business Item.
"I understand you to say that Rogers is the proprietor of a match factory."

"So he is. He runs a matrimonial agency."—Up-to-Date.

A Safe Tip.
"Which direction is that shootin'?" shouted the policeman as he dashed around the corner.

"Down the street," grinned a newsboy.

"Then I've got 'em," and he sprinted up the street to make the capture.—Detroit Free Press.

LACKED LUXURY.

A Newspaper Man's Trying Experience in Chicago.

Being Unable to Obtain Employment He Lives for Six Months on $70—How He Managed It.

Six months ago a newspaper man came to Chicago to get work on one of the big papers here. Like many another man from the country he thought that the fact that he was head and shoulders above the other newspaper men in his little town was proof that he was able to stand the keen competition in Chicago. But he found that the places were filled, and that there were at least 50 per cent. more pegs than holes. He was determined not to go back to his little town, so he remained in Chicago in the hope that he would get a place.

Meanwhile he had no money whatever and had to practice the closest economy. He wrote five or six columns of copy each week and tried to sell the stories to the Sunday papers. Now and then he sold something, but his income during the six months was not more than $2.50, his total earnings for that period, in fact, being only $70. Nevertheless he managed to live without borrowing any money, for he had no friends in Chicago from whom he could borrow, and he was too proud to write home for money. Instead he wrote home glowing tales of the progress which he was making and told of the advantages of newspaper work in a big city and its consequent rewards.

Few people would believe that a man could live in Chicago for six months on $70, but he did it. Of course he did not dine at a fashionable restaurant. He ate his meals on Clark street at some sacrifice of his pride, but without the knowledge of any of his acquaintances. No one would know where he ate, for none of the men whom he saw during the day would go to such a place. His meals usually cost him five cents each, and they were good meals, in quantity, if not in quality.

You can buy a luxurious breakfast on Clark street for five cents. It will consist of three eggs, bread, butter and coffee, and anyone inclined to doubt the statement can go and try the meals. The places are easily found. There are always big signs outside of them containing names of the articles of food and the prices. For five cents he bought his dinner, which consisted of any kind of meat, potatoes, bread and coffee. A similar bill of fare at the same expense formed his supper. Sometimes he would pay ten cents for his dinner and then he would get two more vegetables and some pie for dessert. Thus his meals cost 15 cents a day, or $1.05 a week.

He slept in a ten-cent lodging house in the same room with a half dozen other men. The beds were small, but he always slept soundly, and none of the inmates knew him. They were not inquisitive and were too much bothered by their own troubles to care to ask his. Seventy cents a week was the cost of his lodgings. This was a total of $1.75 for a week's board and lodging. His other fixed expenses were for tobacco, newspapers and writing paper. He smoked a pipe, the tobacco costing ten cents a week. He had to buy a couple of newspapers each day, which meant 25 cents a week, although sometimes he would look at those in the reading-rooms of the libraries. His copy paper cost him only ten cents a week, leaving a margin of 30 cents.

The only drawback about sleeping in a ten-cent lodging house was that there was no place afforded in which to write, but he used to go to the public or Newberry library and do his writing there, where there are ample facilities. Most of his time was spent in traveling around on the streets looking for good Sunday stories.

Such was the life he led for six months. A few weeks ago he was given a place as a space writer on the city staff. Now he earns $10 or $12 a week, and he is able to live more luxuriously. But the reporter is now willing to believe, as he knows by practical experience, that a man who can make two or three dollars a week need not starve in a big city.—Chicago Times-Herald.

North Pole Companions.
Some curious details of life in the polar regions have been obtained from members of the Nansen expedition. They all dwell on the feelings of delight which they have experienced in once more meeting other human beings. So tired did they become on seeing the same faces and hearing the same voices day after day in the course of the slow drift northward that in the end a feeling of irritation was produced. At times this irritability became well-nigh insupportable. Finding it almost impossible to endure the sight on other day, they would set off on long walks over the ice, each man by himself. It was an astounding thing, one man said, to see his comrades striding away over the ice from the ship, each in a different direction and carefully avoiding his fellows.—Golden Days.

Would Never Do.
The great theatrical manager frowned.

"Ever lose your diamonds?"

"No."

"Ever mixed up in a newspaper scandal?"

"No, sir."

"Ever get divorced?"

"Sir, my reputation is above reproach!"

"Well, you've got a nerve to ask me to star you, with all those disadvantages."—Town Topics.

Good Reason for It.
It was the seventh time she had tried on the gown, and she still had fault to find with it.

"It doesn't seem to me," she said, "that it becomes my complexion."

The dressmaker shrugged her shoulders.

"Madame forgets," she said, "that she has not the same complexion she wore last time she was here."—Chicago Post.

No Hope.
Family Doctor—Nothing more can be done for you, sir. I have exhausted my resources, and I advise you to make your will.

Patient—But I have been told that Dr. Blank says he can cure me.

Family Doctor—Huh! I'd just like to see him try it. I'd have him ejected from the society for breach of etiquette. —N. Y. Weekly.

MILK A NUTRITIVE.

A Medical Man Who Existed for Thirty Days on It.

A medical man expresses the belief that a person could live for any length of time and take heavy exercise all the while on no other food than sweet milk. His conviction is the result of personal experiment.

He wanted to establish the fact that persons convalescing from sickness may grow stronger with no other nutriment than sweet milk, and that they are not obliged to take "something solid" to eat, as so many people imagine. He holds that many a convalescent has gone into his grave as a result of overtaxing his weak stomach by putting "solid" food into it, and he maintained that the old belief as to bread being the first essential of human life is shown by his experiment to be erroneous.

His test was to live 30 days with only sweet milk as a nourishment. In the whole time he lost 5 1/2 pounds in weight, but no strength. He even attributes the loss of weight to the warmth of the weather and to excessive exercise on the bicycle and the daily manipulation of 16-pound dumbbells and other heavy weights. He took more exercise than usual in order to test the thing fairly.

On the seventh day of the experiment he ran several fast races in a skillful manner, but was beaten in each race.

On the thirtieth day he again pitted himself against the same runner and got the best of his opponent, which certainly would tend to confirm his statement that he lost no strength during the 30 days' test. He drank four pints of milk daily for the last week. He thinks a healthy person should take about five pints of milk daily when no other food is being taken. His practice was to drink milk at intervals of two hours during the day, commencing at seven o'clock in the morning and continuing until ten at night. After that he would take no more until the next morning.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.
