The Amount Swelled.

The amount of booty secured by the Baker City postoffice robber or robbers has been considerably swelled since the first report, save the Democrat. At that time Postmaster Foster could only give side of the cliffs and fall in pools at the amount of cash and stamps missing the bottom. from the safe. Since that time he has been able to learn the contents of the registered packages taken and finds that upwards of $1,000 from this source was secured, making about $2,000 in all. One package contained gold dust amounting to $365 and was sent through the mail by a Chinese mining company at John Day, Grant county.

MOUNTAIN LEAKS HONEY

A Natural Storehouse of Sweetness in Pennsylvania.

On Warm Days the Rocks Drip with the Sweets of the Great Beehive Within - Stories Told by Kishacoquillas gap is located in the Tussey,or Seven mountain, range, and is one of the many, breaks through this wild chain of mountains leading from Penn's valley into Stone valley.

The Seven mountain range is haps the wildest system in the state of Pennsylvania. More than one experienced hunter and woodsman has lost his way in these mountains, and spent weary days wandering around before he found his way to civilization again, and some even failed to return to it, and it is the general belief that

Years ago current report said that in one of the least explored of the many instnesses of these mountains there was a bee hive in the rocks which contained enough honey to make a man rich. The story was in effect as follows: Some eight or ten miles north of the gap is one of the deepest ravines inclosing the wildest spot in the entire chain of mountains. Precipitous cliffs to the height of several hundred feet rise on either side, the whole almost completely covered with a dense growth of small shrubbery and trailing vines. while away down at the bottom, so deep that the sun hardly penetrates, owing to the narrowness of the gorge, trickles a small stream or rivulet.

On the north side of this gorge, about half way up the rock side of the cliff, is a fissure in the rock presenting an opening perhaps 20 feet long and varying in width from two to five feet Though there is no accurate way of knowing the depth of this fissure or cave in the rock side, it has been estimated at anywhere from 30 to 50 feet, perhaps even more, and possibly with the dimensions of a large cham-

In this rift in the rock a swarm of bees years ago made their home, and there they have continued to abide multiply and store up honey until three years ago, when the last report of them, is given by a lost hunter, stated that so numerous had they become that there was one perfect column or string of bees fully a foot thick continually going and coming from the stone hive.

Parties who claim to have seen it aver that on a warm day the sweet fluid, melted by the hot rays of the sun in the brief time its rays penetrate the opening, would trickle down the

Several parties attempted to dislodge the bees and get at the hive of honey, but owing to the difficulty in getting at the opening they were never successful, as the bees always drove them away.

A few days ago a stranger, who claimed to hail from the eastern part of the state, and who had been trudging these mountains in quest of the outloofor game on several of the game preserves located here, stopped a few min-utes at the gap, and while here told of seeing the beehive in the rocks. The man was so excited over the discovery that he could hardly tell a complete years that there is no doubt that he found the wonderful honey deposit. The man averred that the bees gong and coming looked like an immense 'ar rope at least two feet in diameter, and so constantly did they keep at their work that in the hour or more he watched them there was not one break in the flying string of bees.

To dislodge the bees and secure the honey would, however, be an almost inpossible task, at the very least a Herculean one. From the bottom of the avine to where the rift in the rock occurs is fully 75 feet, and from the ton iown to the rift is almost an equal disinnee. The rocky side is very nearly Graight up and down, and the small brush and wild vines with which the side is almost entirely covered are not embedded securely enough in the rocks to admit of one climbing either up or lown them as a support. There is only one way by which the cavern could be reached, and then it would be at the risk of destroying the rich store therein, and that is to blow the mountain side up with dynamite. But even this mode of attack would not rid the place of all the bees, and when once their home was destroyed all interlopers would want to seek some secure retreat. The stranger averred that he would find a way to get the bees out and get at the store of honey

He declared his intention of return ing to make the attempt, at least, and what the results will be remain to be

Five, four, or even two tons of honey is a large pile of the sweet stuff, and the smaller amount, if it could be put on the market in anything like a good condition, at the present price of 15 cents per pound, would realize just $600 for the successful bee hunter, a very clever sum to pull from a rift in the mountain side.—Philadelphia Times.

THE PENKNIFE HABIT.

It Afflicts Over Half the People in the World.

Public Walls and Benches Bear Evidence That the Whittling Flend Is Abroad in the Land-Romantic But Ruinous.

One-half the world is afflicted with the penknife habit, and on that account the poor world presents a most mutilated, scarred and butchered aspect.

Watch the penknife flend at work. He has just spied a fresh new bench in the park. Everything fresh and new is his own especial prey. He draws back and rivets his eyes upon it, startled at first by the sudden discovery of another victim. Then he pounces upon it, like the hawk upon the mild gray field mouse, and whipping out his manybladed knife, he begins to carefully, maliciously engrave his name, the date of his birth, his present address, his past occupation, and various other important details all over that virgin park bench.

Criminal! He has no other occupation. He was born to the knife, for the knife. It is useless for him to try to be otherwise. He is a ribald irresponsible nuisance, a mean, petty, relentless destroyer of every smooth surface that crosses his path.

Whole walls have been covered by him with fanciful groupings of the alphabet. Beautifully carved staircases and porches have been the subjects of his attacks. Young trees have been killed by his incessant digging into the bark with his pearl-handled wearon. He invades marble halls and scratches his name on beautiful Italian marble; he penetrates into graveyards and perpetuates his memory alongside that of the numberless dead.

He never ventures abroad without his penknife. Whole hours are spent by him basking in the sun, leaning against some soft pine pillar, carving it down to suit his fancy, and gathering a little forest of chips about his feet. Large public buildings suit his purpose best. The city hall has always been a joy to his soul. Especially about the main entrances, where he is permitted to loiter, he has cut and engraved until the massive walls and doors look like. ancient Egyptian tablets, a mass of illegible heiroglyphics. He complains because the old post office, once a rich field for his zeal, is now closed forever against his industrious fingers. But the various railway stations still afford him a hunting ground. The Northwestern and the Union depots, with their large and crowded waiting rooms, are particularly favorable to the cultivation of the practice.

And the man with the penkuife habit is never caught. Apparently he works in the dead of night when all the world is napping, for he is seldom discovered in broad daylight. He works as the ant works, persistently, laboriously, doing just a little each day. But the sum total is enormous. The damage which he does to valuable property reaches the thousands.

It is hard to fling away the sentiment that once surrounded the lovers twain, the yielding sapling and the keen-edged knife. When Herman and Dorothea rise before our mental vision it is always under the noble oak tree, standing together, and carving their giant, to be an everlasting evidence of stomach and intestines will usually retheir everlasting love. Rosalind and ject undigested the contents of an oc-Orlando in the forest of Arden carved true lovers' signs and ill-shaped hearts | habitual overeating they become achere, there and everywhere to lead their customed to appropriating large quanfootsteps together. Coming down to tities of food, which are absorbed, but fact and the end of the century, it is which cannot be eliminated without still the poetical practice of all the sentimental and romantic.

But there is no romance about the thoroughbred penknifer. He wants the system rebels, and a violent bilious glory, and he spares no pains to obtain attack, by vomiting and purging, brings it. He works with the detailed interest | relief. and impressible persistency that proves the existence of one great predominat- avoidable errors in diet are responsible ing idea.

Psychologists say that the penknife habit is allied to that universal human desire called notoriety. It is an offspring of the love for fame. Sometimes by accident the penknifer discovers himself abroad without his trusty lance in the hot pursuit for publicity, and he resorts to the pencil. Then he inscribes his name on painted walls, on pictures and in borrowed books to go thundering down the ages, an everlasting eyesore to posterity. Sometimes his weapon takes the form of a rubber stamp. Armed with that, he goes abroad and stabs at every available object within his reach. - Chicago Times-Herald.

Bald Heads.

It is maintained by a physician who has studied the subject that plenty of hair on the head means plenty of brains; that the hair is a sure index of one's staying power. "I always look on the bald-headed man," he says, "as deficient, not only in hair, but in actual brain power. You know each hair is connected with the brain by a tiny nerve and the loss of all these nerves means the loss of powers. Indeed, though the effects may not be at first so apparent, a man may as well lose his hand or foot as his hair. If you doubt this, the next time you hear of a man who has all his life been clear-headed and practical suddenly doing some foolish and inexplicable thing or breaking down in a crisis which demands all his energies, just look at his head. In nine times out of ten he is bald. Half the men who drop dead suddenly are bald. In almost every ease, however, there is a hope of cure for baldness if the head is regularly submitted to a gentle 'scratching and occasionally to a thorough dosing of asuitable stimulating soap.

A PROPER DIET. voldable Errors Are Responsible for

Many Diseasee. The nature and quantity of an appropriate diet must depend largely upon one's age, individual constitution, occupation, habits of life and, to some extent, upon the climate in which one lives. An active child 12 or 15 years old, who is growing fast and exercising freely, may require and assimilate as much food as a man past middle age.

In health, the appetite may be taken is a fair guide, and the child will seldom eat too much if he is taught to eat very slowly, and thoroughly to chew each mouthful.

Throughout the school years the growth of the body is continually going on, and, therefore, if a proper development is to be maintained, the food must be abundant and of a character to furnish new tissues and to yield energy in the form of heat and muscular activity The full adult weight is not usually attained before the 25th year, although in some instances it is reached earlier. When the growth of the body and the development of the vital organs are completed, the use of food consists simply in maintaining the proper equilibrium of the tissues by replacing waste with new material, and in furnishing fuel for the development of force. As men advance in life, become pros perous, and perhaps acquire more luxurious habits of living, they are apt to take less exercise and, at the same time, to be constantly tempted to indulge in food which is not needed and which is imperfectly consumed in the body. On the other hand, quite as much ill may result from eating too little as from overindulgence. In either case the difficulty is made serious by long continuance.

So great is the force of habit over the different organs of the body that the cassional excessive meal, whereas with severely taxing the organs of excretion. Frequently the excess is stored up in the body and goes on accumulating until Constantinople, More Than Rome, I Likely to Be Purchaseu. It is suggested that the Roman Catholies of Christendom shall subscribe $1. 000,000,000 to buy Rome and a near-by seaport for the pope, says Harper's Weekly. The belief is expressed that the Italian government might sell the property without serious detriment to its political integrity and that the money could be used to great advantage in relieving Italy of part of the burden of her public debt. It is not proposed to turn over the principal to the venders, but to place it in trust and to pay its annual proceeds into the Italian treasury as long as the pope remains undisturbed in the papal territory.

The plan is a very pretty one and there are those who think the money might be raised and that King Rumbert's government would appreciate the advantages of such a bargain. But would Rome be the best purchase the pope could make with the money? Chicago would take him vastly cheaper and give him port privileges on Lake Michigan, but she could not engage to make him monarch of an American township at any price. But there is Constantinople, an excellent city, where popes have lived before, full of readymade churches built by Christians and nearly ripe now for reconsecration. Constantinople seems liable to come into the market any day. If the pope could buy it of the sultan that would be a deal worth subscribing to and worth turning a page of history to record,

FORGOT HIS NECKTIE. Embarrassing Situation of a Young Man Out West. In these days of cheap neckwear a man is poor indeed who cannot afford a large collection of ties. There is one young man in this city, however, says the Denver Times, who would have willingly paid five times the cost of a cravat, if necessary, a few days ago. He is a genius in his way, and, like most of his tribe, requires a guardian. It was on a bright, warm morning, not long since, that he sauntered from his home, just about shopping time, and in his absent-minded way wandered downtown. As he walked along Sixteenth street people gazed at him curiously, and some were ill-bred enough to laugh. Their curiosity was lost upon him, however, for he was far away in reveries of the bright, happy times when editors accept everything that is offered without even asking ambitious young authors to ruthlessly cut manu-"to satisfy our readers." wandered into a crowded drug store, and, elbowing his way through the throngs of well-dressed women, asked for his favorite phosphate, and then continued his stroll until he reached the office of the Times. Then some one asked him why he did not dress before coming on the street. He looked up in mild amazement, sought a mirror, and then made a rush for the nearest haberdashery. Since then he has become possessor of a complete collection of ties, and when he sees his sister wearing the choicest specimens, his hand fuvariably seeks his collar band to see if he has again been neglectful.
