The Young Are Buried with Few Fu-

The customs of the Chinese in the matter of death and burial are certainly peculiar. Infants are buried summarily without coffins, and the young are interred with few rites, but the funerals of the aged of both sexes are elaborate in proportion to the number of the descendants and to their wealth. When a childless married man dies, his widow may perform all the duties of house, and may rdopt children to rear as his heirs, and as worshippers of the where it is fully described and treated. Some years ago, he states, I was remarrying again, a young male relative may, with the consent of senior members of the clan, undertake the services expected from a son, and may inherit the estate of the deceased. When one is about to die, he is removed from his couch to a bench, or to a mat on the floor, because of a belief that he who dies in bed will carry the bedstead as washed in a new vessel, in warm water, in which a bundle of incense sticks is merged. After the washing the vessel and the water are thrown away together. He is then arrayed in a full suit of new clothing, that he may appear turned from a week's visit to Portland at his best. He breathes his last in the main room before the largest door Harry F. Fredden returned last night in the house, that the departing soul may easily find its way out into the air. A sheet of spirit money (brown paper having a patch of gilding on one surface) is laid over the upturned face, because it is said that if the eyes are left uncovered the corpse may count the row of tiles in the roof, and that in such case the family should never build a more spacious domicile.

To get rid of that inch you pay $1.20. An inch a month is 12 inches a year, costing you

PECULIAR CHINESE CUSTOMS. A London Doctor's Peculiar Experience with a Patient

> The Treatment Is More Geographical Than Medical, Showing the Trouble to Be of a Mental Nature.

Dr. William O'Neill, late physician to everal Lincoln institutions, sends the following account of a strange experience to the Lancet. It describes a case of that very old and commonplace a son toward him, may remain in his complaint, jealousy, or "spirit of jealousy," as it is named in the Scriptures,

Some years ago, he states, I was requested to visit a lady who, it was represented to me, was very ill and required immediate attention. On entering the house I was shown into the so-called sick room, in which there were three persons, all of whom seemed to me to be in good health. There were present an old lady (owner of the house) and her daughter, who had ara burden into the other world. He is rived a few days previously from a neighboring county to spend two or three weeks with her mother, and the daughter's husband, whose visit was only to be for a day or two.

The man was about 35 years of age, small in stature, swarthy in complexion and plain looking. The wife was a string contrast to her husband. She was rather tall, remarkably fair and handsome and was a few years younger than her good man. I asked which of them was the patient, but no answer having been given to my inquiry, I asked again. Then the younger lady, with some hesitation, said:

"I am the patient, and my complaint is jealousy. I am jealous of my husband, and if you do not give me something to relieve me I shall go out of my

This accusation against the little man seemed to me to be most ridiculous; indeed, I could not help thinking that if the accuser had been the accused it would have been more in the nature of things. I assured the lady I was extremely sorry for her, the more so that I was quite incompetent to treat such a case. The husband protested his innocence and declared there was no cause whatever for her accusations. The wife persisted in reiterating them, and so the wrangle went on till suddenly she fell from her chair on the floor in a fit the spasmodic movements

At one moment the patient was extended at full length with her body arched forward in a state of opisthotonos. The next minute she was in a sitting position with the legs drawn up, making, while her hands clutched her throat, a guttural noise. Then she would throw herself on her back and thrust her arms and legs about, to the no small danger of those around her. Then becoming comparatively quiet and supine, she would quiver all over, Pullman while her eyelids trembled with great rapidity. This state perhaps would be followed by general convulsive move- Elegent ments, in which she would put herself in the most grotesque postures and make the most unlovely grimaces.

At last the fit ended, and, exhausted and in tears, she was put to bed.

The patient was a lithe, muscular woman, and to restrain her movements during the attack with the assistance Daudet had a lurking kindness for at hand was a matter of impossibility; sinners. He pitied them, for he could so all that could be done was to prevent by the kindness of a friend, who exchanged part of his district with him. The fit was not the disease, but it was the symptom or manifestation of a
