BOMBARDMENT

Only One American Killed --- Morro Fort the Principal Object of Attack--The Forts Badly Damaged.

KEY WEST, May 18 .- The newspaper dispatch boat has arrived today bringing details of the bombardment of San Juan May 12th. The most significant forts were not completely silenced. In fact, a shot from a Spanish gun was fired while the squadron was steaming the only man slain during the battle. Sampson and the officers and men were fleet, including deadly torpedo-destroyers, would be there.

flag was fired on, however, and an order was given to bombard without further

The ships did not enter the entrance to the harbor, but remained in front of Morro castle and Fort San Cristobal. San Carlos and San Greonimo, which are situated on each entrance to the harbor. Our warships sailed right past the batteries and delivered a fire after done three times, the battleships delivered a terrible fire, as did also the monitors Terror and Amphitrite.

Morro Fort was the chief object of the attack and a storm of shells poured into it. It occupies an elevation of 125 feet, and its guns could, if well handled, have delivered terrible destruction of fire. The first shot, a thousand-pound projectile, from the Iowa burst over the fort, tearing a big gun from its emplacement and hurling tons of rock and debris far and wide and creating great havoc generally.

The Spaniards must have suffered heavy losses, but fought bravely. Their shots went far and wide. One hit our ship squarely and struck the ventilator of the Iowa and burst, slightly wounding three men. Another wrecked a liteboat on the New York, killing a seaman named Frank Whitemark. These fatalities occurred when the ships were entering the harbor.

Morro and the other defenses were badly damaged, as officers through their glasses could see men, rock and earth go up into the air as the shots struck the fort. The Spanish redoubled their fire when our ships withdrew. The fight lasted three hours and ended at 8:15 in the morning. Each commander fought standing out on the protected bridge of his vessel. Sampson occupied the Iowa as his flag-ship, and observed the fight through glasses he held in his hand, standing on the bridge of that battle-ship, while shells scattered around and over him. The captains. aides and the signal officers were the only ones exposed, all others being under cover.

SAMPSON'S FLEET STRENGTHENED

The Oregon Marietta and Buffalo Have Joined Sampson.

WASHINGTON, May 18 .- Official information was given out late today to the effect that the battle-ship Oregon is safe. Unofficially it is learned that the Ore gon, Marietta and Buffalo are all safe. It is learned further that these three vessels have joined Sampson's fleet and thereby have very materially increased the strength of that most formidable equadron. With the Oregon safely within the limits of the West Indian waters, the five great battle-ships of the United States are in a position to cope with the entire Spanish navy, if necessary, the combined Spanish fleet. Even granting that the Cisneros, Princess de Austurias and Cataluna have joined the Cape Verde fleet, they have between them only fourteen guns of 11-inch caliber, which is the largest in the Spanish navy. The seven cruisers, supposed to be somewhere in the vicinity of the north coast of Venezuela, are without doubt the most powerful vessels in the possession of Spain, and yet five battleships in combined of the Wasco warehouse at Arlington equadrons of Sampson and Schley carry twelve 13-inch guns and six 12-inch and checked before it secured headway, guns between them. The rejected men will be allowed their subsistance and transportation, nothing more.

This will prove pleasant news to the soldiers. They probably would have rereceived pay from the state, in time, but legislatures are uncertain and time is fleeting, and now, by Uncle Sam assuming the duty of paymaster, there is no doubt about the result. The state will have to recompense the 8 00 rejected men for their service. Adjutant-General Tuttle believes the state will gladly do this. But for the liberality of the government, the state would have to assume the entire burden of paying off the regiment, which would be quite different from paying off the few men rejected. the adjutant-general took no Italian Bees. officers are equally pleased.
