SPANISH METHOUS AT MANILA.

Spanish methods of government, commerce and finance in the Philippines seem to have been based on studied unreason, says the Spokesman-Review. Among other iniquitous laws which the United States authorities have abolished was one forbidding the importation of Mexican dollars of a date subsequent to 1877. As Mexican dollars are practically the only money in general circulation in the islands, the purpose and effect of this law was to create and perpetuate a ruinous monetary monopoly. At times money became so scarce that the dollar would frequently go to a premium of 10 or 12 per cent. At such times partial relief would be had by smuggling in Mexican dollars from China, and Edward W. Harden, special commissioner of the United States in the Philippines, says this smuggling of silver into the islands was a recognized industry.

"It was carried on largely by the rich mestizos, or Chinese half castes. There was a regular system for bringing in these coins, which would be shipped from Hong Kong in a special steamer and the cargo landed at some point north or south of Manila bay. Practically all of the silver was landed in the neighborhood of Bolinao, where it would be stored until it could be shipped overland to Manila. There was nothing disgraceful, in the view of the people in Manila in these practices, and those who were interested in the illicit trade will discuss their operations, telling the manner in which coins were brought in. In a convent north of Manila there were regularly equipped vaults in the basement of the building, where much of the silver was first taken."

Immediately on the occupation of Manila by the American forces, per says the effect has been to keep ex-

School Saving System as the best and most practical way to teach the youth of our state lessons in thrift, economy, self denial and industry. The habit of laying aside a part of their income is of incalcuable value to any one and especially to the child in the days when habits are in a formative stage.

It is an educational measure which will prevent to a great extent pauperism, intemperance and crime. Educators have noticed that thousands of young people are graduated from our institutions of learning every year with minds well stored with knowledge, a large part of whom make an absolute failure in business because they have
