> We know of a herd of milk cows near Salem that was recently subjected to the tuberculin test for tuberculosis. What, readers, do you think happened? Why, it was found necessary to kill just half of the whole number. And these cows had been supplying milk right up to the time they were sacrificed! We do not wish to unduly alarm any one here; but how do you know the milk you are drinking is not filled with the germs of consumption? There is but one way to know. That test ought to be made universal and regular. The law contemplates this. But the law is not enforced. There are plenty of healthy cows. Most of the cows are healthy. But it would not hurt these to be regularly subjected to the test.-Statesman.
