The only respect in which this sport differs from others is in the fact that this year a new company has been organized, and that it has made a new location, differing very much from the location of the old portage railroad company, and parelleling it between the bg eddy and Celllo. Those who are familiar with the old portage railroad scheme will remember that its eastern terminus was at Columbus and its western terminus at Crates Point, and that it was 22 miles long, instead of 10 miles, which is the length of the recently surveyed line.

A SALEM WEDDING.

Roger B. Sinnott of this City, Takes Unto Himself a Wife

"Lucky is the bride the sun shines apon" and never was there a fairer October day than vesterday high noon, when Miss Augusta Gertrude Lownsdale, daughter of Mrs. Gertrude Lownsdale. became the bride of Mr. Roger Brass Sinnott, of The Dalles.

Promptly at 12 o'clock Mrs. H. P. Me-Nary, sister of the bride, struck the familiar strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march, and all thoughts were upon nothing but the wedding party. First came the two maids of honor, Miss Ethel Williams, of Portland, and Miss Elizabeth Foulke, of California, attired exactly alike in dainty rose-pink organdie and carrying large shower bouquets of La France roses. Next came the praverbook bearer, Master Philip Patterson, who lent quite a great deal to the beauty of the march; and then the bride, who was certainly a "picture fair to see." In all her past loveliness she has never exceeded the brilliancy of this occasion -for Miss Lownsdale was always unquestionably "the belle of our town" and all regret that she had to be given up. Her gown was of the sheerest, most exquisite, and beautifu! white organdie, long veil pinned with fragrant orange blossoms, and, with a bonquet of long-stemmed bride's roses, she was without doubt as lovely a conception as the posts rave about.

Mr. Sinnott was attended by his brother, Mr. N. J. Stnnott.

The main hall of the spacious residence of Mr. and Mrs. G. W. Gray, where the reception was given, was one mass of bright red and green berries, synonymous of the autumn season. The drawing rooms were banked with palms, sweet peas, chrysanthemums and beautiful roses; and the dining room for the bridal party was gorgeous in its array of every conceivable variety of begonias and dainty ferns and smilax. The table where the bridal pair were seated was artisticully decorated; in the center was an immense bowl of cut glass filled with La France roses; suspended from the chandeller and tied to each end of the table was a lover's knot of white mossetine interluced with greens, and from every available spot the very choicest tropics were in profusion. The other guests were royally served in groups at tete-a-tete tables. where salads, ices, and the bride's cakes were in full evidence.

The intended travelers were then hastened to prepare for the wedding trip, and as the bride ascended to the her bouquet in the air three times, then threw it directly into Miss Beulah Pat-
