PEARY'S EXPEDITION

Accomplishments of the Great Arctic Sledge Traveler.

A Large Amount of Successful Work in Extending the Path Toward the North Pole—His Present Expedition.

It will surprise no one who knows the uncertainties of Smith sound navigation to learn that Mr. Peary was unable last year to force the Windward, carrying his supplies, nearer than 200 miles of the point he hoped to reach as his winter quarters and base of operations for his attack upon the pole. The Greeley relief vessel Proteus was crushed and sunk at the south end of the channel in 1883. Sometimes the channel may be navigated with great difficulty, as in 1875, when it took Nares' vessels 29 days to advance 230 miles from Cape Sabine to Lady Franklin bay. Sometimes again the channel is comparatively free from ice, as in 1881, when Greeley made the same journey in six days.

During the year his vessel was beset in the ice Peary was very busy with his sledge expeditions, and he has again justified the compliment which Sir Clements Markham paid him when he called the American explorer "the greatest of Arctic sledge travelers." His routes have extended over 1,500 miles, and he has covered much new ground and obtained most interesting knowledge about the geography of the region near Smith sound. Hayes sound, northwest of Cape Sabine, was thought to penetrate through the land mass to the Arctic ocean on the west, and thus separate Grinnell land from Ellesmere land. Peary has discovered that the so-called sound is merely a narrow inlet, and that Grinnell land and Ellesmere land form one land mass. The explorer has also surveyed and mapped some of the larger indentations on the west coast of the Smith sound route to the north; he has crossed the northern part of Ellesmere land, a journey never before made, and has conducted his surveys of its western coast with those of Lockwood on the north, thus revealing a stretch of unknown coast line. From a geographical point of view there is no doubt that the large amount of accurate information Peary has collected for the enrichment of our maps fully justifies all his expedition has cost.

But he has done much more. The far north is his goal, and with enormous labor he has creched four tons of provisions for 250 miles along the channel he must ascend to reach the north of Greenland. These caches are not more than 50 miles apart, and the supplies they contain, with others he will move north, will enable him to reach a high latitude even if the Windward, next year, is unable to push on to Sherard Osborn fiord with the three years' stores she will carry to the explorer. He will thus make himself partly independent of his steamer, for even if she is unable to reach his northern base, the line of caches he has planted and will extend farther north may be replenished by such sledge journeys as he has made in the past year. The explorer has thus done a large amount of successful work, both in extending exploration and in furthering the interests of his enterprise, which may keep him north for several years to come. None but the most dauntless of men could achieve what Peary has done in the past year, handicapped as he was by an unusually bad season, and by a serious accident that temporarily crippled him. His results thus far justify the hope that his further efforts will be crowned by the rich additions to geographical knowledge which this great explorer seeks to add to the work he has already done.—N. Y. Sun.

Grateful. Gratitude has been defined as "a lively sense of favors to come." Like most cynical utterances upon life and conduct, the measure of truth it holds is not so absolute as to make it a standard for universal application. Here is a case in point: When the Klondike fever was rife, a New Yorker, out of work, penniless and dependent, touched the sympathies of a generous friend who gave him an outfit and sufficient money to reach the gold fields. The New Yorker prospered, and returned home recently to find his benefactor dead, and his widow and children impoverished. At once, and without solicitation he not only returned his friend's gift and the cost of the outfit, but bought and presented to the widow a small house; and here, happy with her children, she has taken up the trade of dressmaking, relieved from the anxieties of the future. Gratitude is not yet an extinct virtue.—Youth's Companion.

As a cure for rheumatism Chamberlain's Pain Balm is gaining a wide reputation. D. B. Johnston of Richmond, Ind., has been troubled with that ailment since 1862. In speaking of it he says: "I never found anything that would relieve me until I used Chamberlain's Pain Balm. It acts like magic with me. My foot was swollen and paining me very much, but one good application of Pain Balm relieved me. For sale by Blakeley & Houghton.

My son has been troubled for years with chronic diarrhoea. Sometime ago I persuaded him to take some of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. After using two bottles of the 25-cent size he was cured. I give this testimonial, hoping some one similarly afflicted may read it and be benefited.—THOMAS C. BOWEN, Glencoe, O. ODD INDIAN CUSTOM.

The Hualapais of the American Desert Rake Up Stones into Long Windrows.

Near the town called The Needles, about 12 miles across the Colorado river, on the California side, writes W. E. Curtis, from Flagstaff, Ariz., to the Chicago Record, is an area of about 1,000 acres, more or less, where the Hualapais Indians rake up the stones in windrows in a most mysterious manner and for a reason that has never been satisfactorily explained to the white citizen of that section.

It is a dreary and dusty desert. Rain seldom falls. The surface of the ground, a hard clay that has been baking in the sun for centuries, is covered with broken lava and pumice stone, which at some time was discharged from one of the great volcanoes, whose silent craters can be seen in the San Bernardino mountains. This is the ordinary appearance of the country for leagues around. You can travel an hour, or ten hours, for that matter, in any direction away from the river bed, without seeing anything green or any plant or thing of life, except a cactus or a sage bush. Under the shadow of a group of mighty hills is a mesa, or tableland, that is almost level, and there, once a year, upon some anniversary, whose significance is not understood, and cannot be ascertained, the Indians of the Hualapais tribe gather at night and rake the lava and pumice stones into windrows. Some of the windrows are two miles long. They are regular in length and in intervals, and the average height is about 12 or 15 inches, just about the height of a windrow of hay left by a horse rake in a meadow.

"THE FOOT SIGN." An Interesting Discussion Over Its Significance Was Stirred Up by the Dreyfus Case.

When a man is sitting with one leg thrown comfortably over the other the foot that is hanging loose undergoes a little movement at each beat of the heart. While the charge of Capt. Dreyfus was pending Marquis du Paty de Clam made a psychological study of the prisoner. Among other things he evidently asked Dreyfus a question calculated to arouse emotion in him, if he was guilty. Dreyfus was in the posture mentioned, and the movements of his foot were suddenly intensified. The marquis urged this as a proof of the prisoner's guilt, and it really seems to have played a part in securing his conviction. Dr. A. Lutaud combated the marquis' inference at the time, and quite justifiably, the New York Medical Journal thinks, but cannot agree with Dr. Lutaud when he says now, in a sarcastic article reflecting on du Paty de Clam, that such movements of the foot, which he calls "instinctive," have nothing to do with the movements of the heart. The movement has been called "the sign of the foot," but Dr. Lutaud proposes to call it "du Paty's sign."
