Crippled by Rheumatism. Those who have Rheumatism find themselves growing steadily worse all the while. One reason of this is that the remedies prescribed by the doctors contain mercury and potash, which ultimately intensify the disease by causing the joints to swell and stiffen, producing a severe aching of the bones. S. S. S. has been curing Rheumatism for twenty years—even the worst cases which seemed almost incurable. Capt. O. E. Hughes, the popular railroad conductor, of Columbia, S. C., had an experience with Rheumatism which convinced him that there is only one cure for that painful disease. He says: "I was a great sufferer from muscular Rheumatism for two years. I could get no permanent relief from any medicine prescribed by my physician. I took about a dozen bottles of your S. S. S., and now I am as well as I ever was in my life. I am sure that your medicine cured me, and I would recommend it to any one suffering from any blood disease." Every body knows that Rheumatism is a diseased state of the blood, and only a blood remedy is the only proper treatment, but a remedy containing potash and mercury only aggravates the trouble. S. S. S. The Blood being Purely Vegetable, goes direct to the very cause of the disease and a permanent cure always results. It is the only blood remedy guaranteed to contain no potash, mercury or other dangerous minerals. Books mailed free by Swift Specific Company, Atlanta, Georgia.

COUNT'S SAD ROMANCE

Comes to the Grave of an Old Love in America Each Year.

Vowed Never to Wed, But Married Another Whose Consent He Obtains to Make the Sorrows of his Journey.

If Guy de Maupassant had lived only to come to New York on the same boat with Count Dessewyn what a romance of love and devotion he could have written! But he is dead now, and the story that Count A. Dessewyn told fell only on the ears of the ship's prosaic passengers. Though married, he comes to visit his love of long ago, and with his wife's entire consent.

The count is a distinguished-looking nobleman from Hungary. Well dressed, affable, of courtly bearing and cultivated manners, he looks the thorough man of the world that he is. But a romantic mission has brought him here, a mission so full of sadness and devotion that it made him the most talked-of passenger aboard ship.

To those he got to know more intimately he told his life story. Each year he comes to this country to see the love who still holds his heart, though he has wife and children at home who know all. But his love's life is devoted to religion now, and his to the wife and children.

"It was in my youth," exclaimed the count, sadly. "I was chamois hunting in the mountains, and after the day's sport I went to the hunt hall. There I met my fate—the woman who should be my bride. She was the beautiful Maria Teresa Kisfaudy. We compared notes. I found that she was the daughter of one of my old professors at the university.

"That night I felt I had met the only woman who could enter wholly into my life. She was so beautiful, so sympathetic, so spirituelle, so altogether heavenly. I lingered long in the mountains. We fell in love and one beautiful morning I offered myself to her.

"For a moment she did not reply. Then she said: 'I love you more dearly than life itself, but I cannot marry you, my sweetheart. I have already resolved to devote my life to religion and to humanity's sufferings.' Oh, the sadness of it! I pleaded with her, offered her everything I had in the world, but she would not yield. One last kiss and I left her, weeping softly. I felt that I must leave those beautiful mountains as far behind me as I could.

"I lived on in hope, though, praying that she might repent of her resolve, but I knew hope was useless, when one day I received word from her that she had taken vows of perpetual celibacy in a nunnery. She did not become a nun; she simply wished to devote herself to good works wherever she found opportunity.

"So I married an estimable woman, who bore heirs to my titles and estates and proved herself an admirable mistress of my home. But the charm, the spirituelle character, the soul of my sweetheart of long ago are not hers. My wife knows all. With her consent I come here once every year to visit the woman who is now devoting herself to religion in America, who, as a little Magyar girl, I loved in the mountains of Hungary. She lives in one of your cities, where I am not at liberty to tell.

Count Dessewyn told his story so simply, so convincingly, that everybody on the ship pitied his lot. There are lines of care in his face and streaks of silver in his hair far beyond his years. He declined to tell where he was going.—Chicago Tribune.

A WORD IN SEASON.

It Was Spoken by Dr. James McCosh to Lord Dufferin in Their Younger Days.

Rev. Dr. James McCosh, lately the president of Princeton college, was a man who dared always to speak a word "in season" or out of season; for the result, he would trust the good chances of life. Before Dr. McCosh came to this country Lord Dufferin frequently invited him to his mansion, Clarendon, near Dublin, where he was making improvements upon his estate and entertaining much company; but this was not enough to satisfy the doctor.

One day as the two were riding in the park, they loosened rein and went slowly, and the clergyman mused what he afterward called either "the courage or the impertinence" to say to his host:

"My lord, I fear you are not fulfilling the end of your life."

Lord Dufferin turned to him somewhat imperiously and asked: "What do you mean?"

"I mean that you have talents and accomplishments. You have great influence both in your descent and your property, and something good and great is expected of you."

"But what," said his lordship, "do you expect me to do?"

"I expect you to devote yourself to statesmanship," was the reply.

"Do you think," said Dufferin, thoughtfully and earnestly, "that I have the talent for this work?"

Dr. McCosh assured him that he did think so, and the conversation continued as they rode slowly homeward.

No one can now say whether this talk had any influence on Lord Dufferin's conduct, but it was not long before he was deep in political matters, where he succeeded in quelling a disturbance, or as he afterward said, "pacifying Syria as the sand of the desert is pacified, till the next breeze."

But his public career did not end there, for since then he has been governor general of Canada, viceroy of India and ambassador to France. It may be that Dr. McCosh's little word was the influence that led him to begin his long and brilliant public service.—Youth's Companion.
