BARKING UP THE WRONG TREE THE CHRONICLE has no desire to

"chew the rag" with the Oregonian over its falsification of the primary returns of Wasco county. It repeats, however, that the Oregonian did falsify thes : returns by injecting were not, to THE CHRONICLE's be president. knowledge, thinking of Mr. McBride. When the Oregonian says it has positive and authoritative information that the result of the primaries here was reached "without promise, direct or indirect, to the mousing senator" it states what THE CHRON-ICLE never thought of denying. The result was reached, too, without promise, direct or indirect, to Ex-Governor Pennoyer. And just in the same sense; and such information would have been equally appropriate in an edited dispatch. But enough on this line. The Oregonian's attack of yesterday has afforded a good laugh for The Dalles folks, and not whelming sentiment of his people at the CHRONICLE man's expense up the wrong tree. ing about in this respect, even the least little bit, THE CHRONICLE, here and now, promises to enlist, horse, foot and dragoons, with the Oregonian in its campaign against Mc-Kinley and the Republican policy of a protective tariff.

Senator Simon will vote against the Puerto Rican tariff bill principally because he thinks the overwhelming sentiment of the people of his state is in accord with him in this determination. He warns his Republican colleagues that the passage of the bill will cost the party a great many votes. This may all be very true, but the senator's reasons for deserting his party are those of the mere politician. Oregon had a senator once who dared to brave public opinion and vote as his judgment and conscience dictated. Time justi sertument" of the people. Time to please. condemned their action and the party repudiated them. Mr. Simon mistakes the Oregonian for "the overwhelming sentiment of the people." He has his reward in that paper's present approval; but the mistake may cost him his head later on.

"The Republican party is assailing and the Democrats are defending the constitution and the supreme court," says Perry Belmont, the New York Democratic Plutocrat. But he adds with fine force: "Those who have themselves attacked the supreme in such an issue." But the Repub- spot in the warm Irish heart.

"Shrewd Senator Simon," "Good Politician," "Accurate Gauger of Public Sentiment." "Exactly Correct, Mr. Simon." These are a few of the endearing epithets that the Me Too Telegram applies to the Oregon senator for deserting his party. Their cooing tenderness melts us to tears.

Democrats are said to be again fied his action and today there is no agitating the question of starting a more honored name in Oregon history Democratic daily in Portland. What than that of J. N.
