DIVORCE IN MEXICO.

The Republic, by a Recent Decision, Does Not Recognize Divorces Granted in United States.

The laws of Mexico have always been strict in regard to marriages and divorces. Recently a case has been decided in the City of Mexico which attracted attention on account of the plaintiff's prominence in society and the legal points involved. In fact, the civil court found it necessary to establish a precedent, as no case of the same character has been tried in the republic, says the New York Times.

In 1895 an American citizen, Edgar Joseph Hahn, of St. Louis, married a young Mexican lady, Senorita Par Diez Barronzo. The wedding was a society event and some of the chief dignitaries of the land were present. Mutual disillusionment and a separation followed, a baby girl being left with the mother. The lady in the case is the plaintiff, and it is said, she desires to marry again.

The rules of the Roman Catholic church do not permit a divorce to marry. The question of one desiring to do so was not to be considered by the church, and there was no civil law to cover the case. The laws of reform make a civil ceremony necessary to a legal marriage. As Roman Catholics consider marriage a sacrament, both civil and religious rites are the rule, and the former taking place first. In case of annulment of the marriage contract new vows may be taken.

The plaintiff in question claimed to have discovered after her marriage that her husband had a wife living, from whom he was divorced. Therefore, as her church did not allow her to marry a divorced man—or him to marry her—she prayed that the contract be declared null and void. This it is said, the church was ready to do but, a civil ceremony being necessary it fell to the court to decide her real status, and it has taken several months to reach a decision, as it felt the responsibility of establishing a law which, in view of the steady growth of foreign colonies in the republic, may be frequently tested.

If the man had no right to marry the lady's situation was a peculiar one—though she chose to accept it, it thereby she is allowed to make a new marriage. Fourth Civil Judge Jesus F. Urdabe decided the marriage to be null and void, owing to a prior union on the man's part, though he had been divorced from his wife in the United States, where it was a lawful act for him to marry again. As he had acted in good faith in his Mexican marriage, no action against him was taken, and each party had its own costs to pay.

Thus it is clear that, while Mexico recognizes a foreign marriage, she does not recognize a divorce secured in any country as giving a right to marry again within her limits. The status of the child did not come before the court, it having died a few months ago. The consensus of opinion among Americans seems to be that Mexico through her courts, has taken a wise step in endeavoring to preserve the sanctity of the marriage vow.

WORDS WE SAY BACK.

Encouragement for the Little One Does Much to Brighten Their Lives.

Little Dorothy came from the kindergarten with her eyes shining, holding in her hand a braided mat of bright-colored paper. The little mat found approving words and admiration in the family circle, and was exhibited when Miss Cary, her mother's friend, came to supper that night. "It is very pretty," said Miss Cary to Dorothy, "and soon you will be making more pretty things, sewing on card board and making bright-colored paper chains. A little boy sent me this word not long ago in his mamma's letter: 'Tell Aunt Beth I've made a chain long enough to reach through two rooms of the house.'"

Dorothy's eyes shone with pleased excitement at the little kindergarten story, and eagerly she asked: "And what did you say back?" The quick question was a revelation. To the little child the success of the story lay in what was "said back."

Words of encouragement are perhaps oftener called for in what we say back than any others; encouragement to begin, to keep on, and to try again, hold within them the kernels of a happy childhood, and successful manhood and womanhood. Let us watch these words we say back to the children, and if possible make them wise with incentives toward future activity.—Constance Conrad, in Woman's Home Companion.

CHEWED A DIAMOND.

A Pug Dog Mangled the Gem Until It Was Necessary to Have It Recut.

Allegheny, Pa., has produced the champion dog story of the season. It is a champion dog because it chewed the corner off a diamond stud. Peter Donaldson, a second ward saloonkeeper, is a little sore over the loss on his diamond, for it was damaged so that it had to be recut; but he can't help feeling proud of a pug dog with such powers in its jaws, says the Pittsburgh Press.

The story is told by August Loch, a jeweler on Federal street, Allegheny. Donaldson walked into his store one day lately with a diamond that he wished reset. Mr. Loch took the stone, and on examining it found it was cracked. He told Donaldson, who gave the following explanation: A few days ago Donaldson left his diamond stud, a beautiful two-carat gem, on the dresser and went into an adjoining room. When he came back he noticed his pet dog chewing something and saw that his diamond was missing. Upon investigation he found the dog had got it and crushed the mounting out of shape. After some time he succeeded in taking the diamond out of the dog's mouth, and at his earliest convenience started to have it reset.

Mr. Loch then examined more closely and discovered the dog had bitten a piece from the stone and damaged it badly. Donaldson was certain the stone was perfect before the dog got it in his mouth. He could scarcely credit the jeweler's statement until he saw it through a magnifying glass. Telling of the matter the other morning, Mr. Loch said: "I have been in the jewelry business for 35 years, and it was the first time I ever heard of such a case. The diamond was a beauty and to all appearances as hard as the ordinary diamond. One corner, however, about one-fourth of a carat, had been bitten off by the dog. The dog that can bite pieces off a diamond is a wonder."

The stone had to be recut and set, and that cost a fair sum. There is a great moral in this case, too. It demonstrates the fact that a pug dog has more power in his jaws than the average person imagines, and the moral is that people should keep their gems out of their pet's reach.

The news of Donaldson's dog chewing up a diamond is widespread in Allegheny, and every person wants to see the dog that has eclipsed all his engine friends. The case is being talked about everywhere, and all claim that Allegheny leads the country with the sensation.
