HAT THAT MAKES HAIR GROW.

A New Yankee Notion That Promises to Drive Bald Heads from Existence.

A Massachusetts Yankee has been tempting immortality by inventing a hat the wearing of which will assure to the most baldheaded of the race a new and luxuriant head of hair, says the New York Tribune. To all outward appearances the new patent differs not at all from the ordinary derby. Its secret is concealed within the crown. There, fastened to the interior of the crown, and thereby raised an inch or more above the hair, is a small metal receptacle. Into this receptacle is locked a specially prepared pad, which is soaked before using with a secret combination of chemicals. When the hat is worn the heat of the head generates a chemical action which throws off from the pad vapor. This vapor, acting on a perfectly bald scalp, will produce a new crop of hair, or if the hair has begun to fall it will renew and strengthen the growth. In this way a baldheaded man need lose no time in taking treatments, but may go about his business serene in the certainty that the vapor is doing its work.

Poor Showing from This Country.

The Artesian Well.

The artesian well which the city is boring back of the distributing reservoir, has now reached a depth of 400 feet. When first started the drill bored a good many feet each day, but they have now struck hard basalt rock and are boring only at the rate of four feet a day. Two streams of water have been struck, one at a depth of 105 feet, when the water raised within 70 feet of the surface; then, again, at a depth of 200 feet of water was struck the second time, and the water in the well fell, so that it only stood 105 feet from the surface of the ground; it remained thus until another stream or a seam in the rock was reached at a depth of 390 feet, and the water then fell so that it came within 200 feet of the surface, the weight of this column of water overcoming the pressure of the artesian water below.

It is proposed to go to a depth of 550 feet, which will then bring the depth of the well below the level of one that was bored by Seufert Bros., near the river last fall, which threw water over 25 feet above the surface of the ground. If the water does not reach the surface at this depth operations will be suspended.

British-American Union Organized

SAN FRANCISCO, Aug. 13.—The British-American Union has been organized in this city. Its purpose is stated to be the furthering in every way of a better understanding between "both great branches of a common race." It is hoped thus to afford a common rallying ground, not only for the 50,000 Britishers in California, but for all those who recognize the mutual interests of the British empire and the United States. A board of fifteen directors have been chosen under the presidency of William G. Harrison.

Suicide of Indian Family.

BURNS, Or., Aug. 10.—A few days ago, Snowdie, a Piute Indian of this county, committed suicide by eating wild parsnips. Last week, his child, a 14-year-old girl, on account of bad health, ended her life in the same way. Her mother, upon finding the child dead, procured some parsnips, and, eating them, also ended her life. It is unusual for Indians to commit suicide.

IOWA'S WILD INDIANS

Last of Powerful Sacs and Foxes in Tama County.

Still Follow the Customs of Primitive Savages in Many Ways—Live in Wigwams and Hold Dog Feasts.

Tama county, Iowa, has a settlement of 400 Indians, the most primitive and wildest tribe of red men in the United States. They are the Muskwakis. For 40 years they have been a source of perplexity to the Indian bureau. Several years ago a government agent visited the camp, and was horrified at the savagery of one of their "dog feasts." He attempted to stop the dance, at the same time throwing in a few remarks about the beauty of free education, says the Chicago Inter Ocean.

"Muskwaki Indian no likem education; it make Indian work like h—l," explained one of the chiefs.

Recently the United States superintendent of Indian schools, Miss Estelle Reel, made a visit to the tribe to try to persuade the Muskwakis to send their children to the reservation school. The conference lasted four days. Miss Reel drove out to the camp and found it crowded with Indians and children. Some of the latter having run away from school, she had gone out to induce the old people to allow their return. She induced "Charlie Greenshake" to allow the return of his two daughters to the school, but "Thomas Jefferson" insisted that his boys could not go back to school until they had gone out to the traps, as he expected to catch two skunks that morning. On the promise of a big dinner to Jefferson, however, he agreed to allow his boy to go to school.

Under the influence of their leaders and the government agents, the most of the Muskwakis removed to Kansas between 1842 and 1845, but scarcely had they been settled in their new homes when they became dissatisfied and began to return and settle in small villages along the Iowa river in Tama county and Johnson county. When the government became convinced of their determination to remain in Iowa, a reservation of about 4,000 acres was assigned to them on a site they selected. Here one generation succeeds another, living as their ancestors did, in wigwams and wick-i-ups. The wick-i-up is used for winter quarters, is oval in form, from ten to twenty feet high in the center, and covered with a matting woven by squaws from rushes gathered along the streams.

They still dress in primitive fashion. The majority of the members of the tribe cling tenaciously to the moccasin, legging, and breecheloth, and loose, flowing shirt and blanket, and only a few are using the clothing of the white man. The Indians have adopted to some extent the culinary utensils of the whites, but there are only five stoves among the tribe, and nearly all the cooking is done over an open fire in the center of the wick-i-up, and the smoke is almost intolerable. Nearly everything that they eat is cooked in lard, and they are content if furnished plenty of hot fried cakes, pork and coffee. They seldom eat beef, and show a marked preference for pork, chicken, turkey, skunk and dog. They relish skunk particularly, and dogs are raised in large numbers for feasts on special occasions. These Indians are excellent judges of good flour and nothing but the finest patent made of northern wheat will meet their approval.

For 15 years there has not been a single convert to the Christian faith, and no member of the tribe has ever been given a Christian burial. Only one civil marriage has occurred.

The Muskwakis are the tattered remnant of the once powerful Sac and Fox Indians, the terror of early white settlers in the region of the great lakes and the Mississippi valley. In 1815 the United States made a treaty of peace and friendship with the Fox nation. The original of this treaty is now in the possession of the chief of the tribe in Tama county, and is preserved in a little buckskin sack. It is prized very highly and guarded jealously. The tribe attaches as much importance to this treaty as the American people do to the declaration of independence. They boast with much pride that they have never violated any of its provisions, and from its date to the present time none of their band has taken up arms against the government.

With the passing of Ma-tau-e-qua, the last war chief of the tribe, who died in 1897, one of the strongest barriers to civilization was swept away. Ma-tau-e-qua fought to the last against education and civilizing influences among his people. His funeral was an affair of state, and conducted according to the rites made most sacred by ages. The burying ground where his body rests is situated on the south side of a high bluff along the north bank of the Iowa river, about an eighth of a miles east of the "Narrows," where the Chicago & Northwestern railway crosses between the bluff and the dam.
