Prosperity of The Dalles.

There is no great excitement in the real-estate market here for the reason that The Dalles is very conservative, and consequently we have no booms, but nevertheless, if people will take the trouble to walk around the city they will be surprised to see how few houses are vacant. Another very the property is well kept and has an air Oregon of equal size can boast of.

Our public schools are institutions of learning of which we are justly proud. Three of these buildings are of brick and Three of these buildings are of brick and pay his debts, and this spirit of merhich is a structure of architectural of the trade." beatny with all the modern improvements and appliances. In addition to our public schools, we have a Catholic school and academy conducted by the Sisters of the Holy Names, and in connection therewith is a day school for young boys. These places of learning, together with the churches of nearly every denomination, are attractions. which have been the means of bringing people to our city who are anxious to give their children the advantages of an education and surround them with church influences. It is needless for us to say that these attractions are usually bought by people of refinement, and consequently we are justified in saying that our population is largely composed of the very best classes.

People of Peking and Tientain Have Little More to Do with the Business Than to Act as Forwarding Agents.

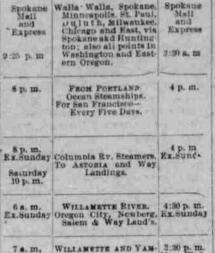

A recent report from San Francisco to the effect that the revolution in China had interfered with the tea export business to such an extent that there would soon be a tea famine and that the price of tea would go up caused a stir in the tea drinking community.

One of the largest importers of tea in the United States said, according to the New York Tribune, that the Chinese trouble had not in any way affected the tea trade as yet. Con tracts are being executed as usual for tea, and orders are being received for goods in exchange, and the large merchants have no fear as to ad vance in price or scarcity of tea. In that part of China where the tea grows it is brought to the towns in bulk, and sold to merchants who col-saurday Landings. lect, assort and cure it, and then put it up in cans, cases and other packnges for transportation. When it reaches that part of the country which is now in a state of revolution it is ready for shipment to this or any other country, and the people of Peking or Tientsin have really nothing more to do with the tea business than to act as forwarding agents. The tea buying business begins in May and lasts until December, and the present troubles have not served to keep the men who usually make the trip to China from Europe and America from making their usual tour. As to prices, it is believed that the Chinese will not use the present conditions as a lever to raise them. although the opportunity for doing so is favorable. But the scrupulous honesty of the Chinese merchants keeps him from making use of his advantage. In speaking of the characteristics of these people, Edward Runge said: "A Chinese merchant will drive a close bargain and do his best to get his goods at the lowest possible price. He will haggle and see every competitor before he gives his order, but once that is done he lives up to his word. He signs no contract and asks no written guarantee from the man with whom he makes the bargain. When the goods are delivered he pays for them, and he does so cheerfully, regardless of the changes that may have taken place in the market value of his goods. He pays as he agrees he will, and in that particular he is more re liable than many European merchants. The Japanese has papers drawn, has them vised and signed by consuls and consular officers, and if noticable feature is that nearly all of the goods should be cheaper when they are received he would find an of prosperity which very few towns in excuse for refusing to accept them, and would compel the producer to reduce his price. I have known Chinese merchants to club together and make up a large sum to help a competitor
