develops a huunting terror of death after he has made a big fortune, and spends an unhappy life and hings summ of money in trying to scale the coming fate, frequently hurrying himself into a premature grave through sheer warry and fear. This pussion, says London Answers, has turned the brains of a good many wealthy people and made monomaniaes of them. "They resort to the most childish expedients to keep death from their doors

You remember Kipling's character. who had his chair slung on ropes from a beam that the world might spin under him, instead of carrying him along to grow older. There was an actual asi very like this a few years ago, when John Islip, an Englishman, who made a huge fortune out of sliver in Mexico, drove himself mad through worrying about his death.

After exhausting all the safeguarda Lordon could offer, he bought a small rocky island called Brychil, on the West Irish coast, taking with him one faithful servitor. Here, in feverish haste. he had four stone pillars raised and a small one-storied cabin, with three rooms, rather like a houseboat, slung on chairs from iron girders that crossed the pillars and swung clear of the ground. Once inside this, he shut himself up with some books and a pet jackdaw for company, and never left hisswinging house until his death.

The attendant, who lived in a small house close by, used to row to the mainland-a mile and a half-when the weather permitted, for provisions. The master spent his time reading and looking out over the Atlantic from the calda windows. His brain had given: way, of course, and he imagined his life stoud still, while the earth revolved under him. He had no relatives to insist on his entering a private asylum, and - died three years later in the cubin. warried out of life by the fear of death. His hair was snow white, though hewas duly 43.

Another wealthy man. Jean Ingleaut, though he had made a fortune by dread speculation, also gave way to the drend of death. He conceived the blea that all inovement and effort wastsi the tissues of the body, and this notion sunk so deeply into his mind that he went to bed in a quiet country house and hardly moved hand or foot for years off he even stirred a finger he did I with dread, belleving it used up his vitality and chartened his life by so much time. He spoke as little as posallahe, sometimes not opening his lips for days, and was fed by attendants. with spoans. All his food consisted of "slops," to save him the fatal exertion of chewing, and his one amusement was being read to by the hour together, for he would not hold a book or turn thepages. Even the reading he did away with toward the close of his life, belleving that listening shortened his exist-

The dread of quarter-back, and without practice, and death seized her, and she was convinced he would die by some wasting disease inspired by microhes. Knowing that cold is fatal to the average germ, she had two rooms adjoining each other fitted as refrigerators and kept constantly at a temperature of about 30 egrees, or just below freezing point. One would suppose this to be more trying than any quantity of microbes; but the owner was happy in her consciousness of freedom from germ diseases. Winter and summer the rooms Zirka were kept at the same point, and the Ward adjoining rooms and hall were also Hagon kept cool, that no current of warm air might bring bacilli in.
